150,000 LOST IN 6-DAY BATTLE; RHEIMS SHELLED

"THIS WAR IS CRUELLEST IN HISTORY," SAYS HALL CAINE

"It would be strange, indeed, if the United States setting in geographical aloofness should not feel that the spectacle it is called upon to witness—a spectacle of two groups of highly civilized nations tearing themselves to pieces by all the devilish arts of mechanical warfare, * * * the murdering of hundreds of thousands of men, the burning of historic cities, the impoverishment of the well-to-do classes, the starvation of women * * * is a spectacle of deep and cruller wrong than any other of which the history of man has record.

Is it right? * * * It is conceivable that ninety millions of enlightened people in the United States, bound to the belligerents by the closest ties * * * can sit on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean and say to each other: 'This bloody business is none of ours. MURRAY RETURNS TO FIGHT FOR TAGUE

Charlestown Candidate for National House Given Powerful Aid by Support of Congressman Unalterably Opposed to Keliher

The candidacy of Peter F. Tague of Charlestown for Congress in the Tenth District was greatly strengthened last night by the support pledged by Congressman William F. Murray who arrived yesterday afternoon from Washington.

Congressman Murray came especially to help Mr. Tague against Keliher in any way, even to taking the stump. Here is what Congressman Murray had to say about the fight in the Tenth District:

"Of course, I am opposed to the nomination of Mr. Keliher as successor as Congressman from the Tenth District. The reasons which actuated me to oppose him four years ago and to beat him hold good today.

WANTS UNDIVIDED VOTE.

"I hope that the people of Charlestown will not divide their strength and throw away their vote on Senator Brennan. However much his friends may want to see Mr. Brennan in Congress it cannot be doubted that outside of Charlestown he has little strength today and that Mr. Tague from Charlestown can defeat Mr. Keliher.

"Therefore it is the part of wisdom for Mr. Brennan's friends to support Mr. Tague as a Charlestown man and as their second choice. I shall do all I properly can to assist Mr. Tague whose ability and public service never have been questioned."

BIG RALLIES FOR TAGUE.

Mr. Tague held a series of stirring rallies last night in Charlestown and East Boston. His first rally at Bunker Hill and Medford street was attended by 1,000. There was another big crowd at City Square and at the rally in Hibernian Hall, Timothy J. Buckley of Governor Walsh's Council declared for Mr. Tague for the first time amid wild applause. In the Ward 3 ward room Mr. Tague faced the biggest rally held there in decades.

At 10:30 Mr. Tague's automobile encountered the Keliher parade of thirty-two automobiles furnished to Keliher by the Swift Construction Company, C. Bowen, contractor, and the R. S. Brine Company, and some other contracting firms. There was red fire and every auto truck carried a quota.

KELIHER PLAN FAILS.

When the Tague auto party was sighted the Keliher cohorts tried to crowd the candidate from Charlestown and to interfere with his speaking. Speakers on different Keliher corporation-subscription-auto-trucks tried in vain to stifle Tague's utterances, but the crowd cheered for Peter F. Tague of Charlestown.

Hearst Peace Move Rouses London Paper

LONDON, Sept. 19.—The London Daily Express, speaking of peace proposals, says editorially:

President Wilson's inquiry as to whether the German Emperor would discuss peace was, of course, inspired by humanitarian motives, but we are not blind to the fact that there is in the United States a powerful party of German-Americans, some of them closely in touch with the President, and all of them eager to be of service to the fatherland.

They are enthusiastically backed by the influence of Mr. W. R. Hearst, always an enemy of Great Britain, and his many newspapers, and it is evident attempts are being made to use the United States government to make it appear that Germany desires peace and that the allies are partisans of war.

The emphatic declaration of the King's speech is therefore more than welcome. By the formal agreement, Great Britain, France and Russia stand together, and they will not consider any suggestion for bringing hostilities to an end until their purpose has been fully achieved.

That purpose is the destruction, once and for all, of Prussian militarism, which has threatened Europe for more than a generation, and which has brought with it a crop of social and economic evils.

Old Pipes for City Club Table Legs

Tables in the City Club's grill room are to have hollow legs.

In excavating for the new building contractors dug up old wooden well pipes of the kind, now barred by statute, but in popular use fifty years ago. The pipes are ten inches in diameter, with a three-inch bore. They were made of straight-grained logs hollowed out with a long augur. They will make unique table legs.

Rigid Inspection for Ships from Italy

Steamships arriving from Italy are to be subjected to rigorous tests at quarantine because of notice that reached the Boston health authorities yesterday that bubonic plague had broken out in Italian ports. The first steamship to undergo the extra inspection will be the White Star liner Canopic due next Wednesday. Cardinal O'Connell and suite are among the passengers. It was learned by the Boston port authorities that seventeen malignant cases had been reported at Catania, Sicily.

ATTLEBORO IS AROUSED BY HAZING AT SCHOOL

Eight Boys Are Summoned to Court Charged with Daubing a High School Freshman with Green Paint and Red Ink

ATTLEBORO, Sept. 19.—Charles L. Doherty, a freshman in North Attleboro High school, is under a doctor's care as result of being plastered with green and red ink in a hazing scrape. He has suffered a severe nervous shock. The question of possible blood poisoning has also been raised.

Eight high school seniors were arrested on warrants issued on complaint of the Doherty boy's father. The eight, who were brought before Judge Frederich Byram in the juvenile session of Attleboro District court are: Charles Copeland, Edward McElhris, Edwin Cummins, Raymond Cornell, George Shattuck, Albert Meyers, Esnyn Atwood and Horace Achin.

At the hearing two of the boys were released, three were charged with disturbance and assault and the other three were charged with disturbance. The cases were continued until December 31.

Doherty is still under the care of a doctor, who says that his condition is serious.

At the hearing none of the faculty or school authorities were present. Judge Byram scored the authorities for the lack of interest they had taken in the case.

Young Doherty's father alleges that his son has been the subject of rough treatment from many of the upper class boys since school started two weeks ago. He wrote to the authorities urging them to request the boys to leave his son alone. This letter he claims received no attention.

According to Doherty he was seized one day last week after school, dragged to an empty lot, and there was covered with green paint and red ink. His father stated that the boy's clothing was ruined and that the lad's health had been seriously injured.

Maeterlinck Works in Belgium Fields

LONDON, Sept. 19.—Maurice Maeterlinck is working in the fields, reaping and stacking wheat, alongside a peasant woman and peasant boys and girls. The picture of the great Belgian poet, thinker and writer of some of the greatest operas of modern times, working in the fields was sent here by the Rouen correspondent of the London Morning Post, who happened upon him as he passed through the outskirts of the place. Maeterlinck is fifty, and therefore not available as a soldier.

SHELLING OF RHEIMS LIKENED TO INFERNO

Correspondent Who Witnessed Bombardment from Belfry of the Cathedral Tells of Fearful Havoc Wrought by Germans

LONDON, Sept. 19.—A news correspondent who returned today from the front, writes a vivid account of the battle now raging on the Aisne, as viewed by him from the vantage of the belfry of the Rheims cathedral.

"What a spectacle it was," he said. "Under the cold, drifting gray rain clouds, one whole semi-circle of the horizon was edged by heights on which the German batteries were mounted, three miles away.

"There was nothing but the inferno of bursting shells, those of the Germans lashing anywhere within the space of a square mile. Sometimes it was just outside the town that they fell, trying to find the French troops lying there in their trenches, waiting to go forward to the attack of the hills, when their artillery should have prepared the way.

"Sometimes it was on the English wool-combing mills of Isaac Holden and company, whose four chimney stacks made them a conspicuous mark, that the German shells fell; sometimes it was right in the heart of the town itself.

WONDERFUL GRANDSTAND.

"Once, one of them, screaming abominably, crashed through the transept at the other end of the cathedral where I was. The cathedral tower made a wonderful grandstand from which to watch this appalling game of destruction. It was under the protection of the Red Cross flag, for directly the shells began to hit the cathedral in the morning, some German wounded were brought in from a hospital nearby and laid on straw in the nave, while Abbe Andreux and a Red Cross soldier pluckily climbed to the top of the tower and hung out two Geneva flags.

"Altogether in the bombardment of the past few days, the cathedral has been struck by eight shells, which fortunately have not done more damage than smash masonry. But they probably were accidental shots. I believe, in fact, that the shell which hit the building while I was there was a stray shot, for one can hardly imagine that the German gunners could miss so huge a mark as the Rheims cathedral, towering as it does above the town, if they really wished to reach it.

HOUSES NOT SPARED.

"But houses close by were not so spared. Shell after shell—I saw a dozen at least—came whistling toward us like gigantic rockets and smashing into houses standing, one of them, just across the cathedral square, only fifty yards away. The crescendo scream they make has something fiendish in it which would be thrilling apart from the danger. Then comes the crash of the explosion, which is like all the breakings you ever heard gathered into one simultaneous smash

HALL CAINE'S FERVID APPEAL TO THE UNITED STATES IN GREAT WAR

By HALL CAINE.
Famous English Novelist and Publicist.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—We in England hear of women going in procession in New York under the symbol of the white flag, and we are not surprised.

We hear of powerful leading articles, powerful sermons and powerful speeches in America denouncing the theory of war as a means of settling disputes in general, and of our present dispute in particular, and we are neither astonished nor offended.

It would be strange, indeed, if the United States, sitting in its geographical aloofness across 3,000 miles of ocean, should not feel that the spectacle it is now called upon to witness in the theatre of Europe—the spectacle of two groups of highly civilized nations tearing themselves to pieces by all the devilish arts of mechanical warfare, involving the limitless outpouring of blood, the murdering of hundreds of thousands of men, the destruction of villages, the burning of historic cities, the impoverishment of the well-to-do classes, the starvation of the poor, the destitution of women with children and the outraging of young girls—is a spectacle of deeper and crueler irony than any other of which the history of man in this world has record.

It would be still more astonishing if America, with its ever-conscious religiosity, should not feel that the fact that these two groups of nations should claim to be Christian nations, and should be praying at the same time to the same God for the success of their opposing armies, ringing the church bells to celebrate their victories or to lament their defeats, singing on the one hand their Te Deum, and on the other their Miserere, and all in the name of Him who said, "Resist not evil," is proof beyond dispute that man is a creature capable either of limitless self-deception or of the most abject and degrading hypocrisy.

And feeling like this it is perhaps natural that you in America should do your best to persuade yourselves that you have neither part nor lot in the hideous European saturnalia, and that your President has done wisely in recommending to you an attitude of personal as well as national neutrality.

NEUTRALITY IMPOSSIBLE.

But is your neutrality possible? Is it human? Is it right? In the face of the appalling spectacle of a great part of the family of man in the death throes of a struggle which must surely affect for good or ill the very foundation of human society, is it conceivable that 90,000,000 of enlightened people in the United States, bound to the belligerents by the closest ties of blood, intellectual interest, religious sympathies and material welfare, can sit on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean and say to each other: "This bloody business is none of ours, so for God's sake let us keep out of it"

Is it because I think it is not possible, not human and not right for America to adopt even passively an attitude of neutrality, that I am making the present appeal to you—an appeal that is intended to assert, with whatever power I possess, your responsibility under the moral law for the present state, the continuance and ultimate outcome of this frightful European struggle.

Does this strike you as an audacious aim, seeing that you, in America, had nothing to do with the making of the war; and yet we are in it, and were compelled

Kaiser's Son Albert Pockets Indemnity

PARIS, Sept. 19.—During the German's stay in Rheims they took a hundred hostages and issued a proclamation threatening to hang the inhabitants if disorders occurred. They also exacted a $200,000 war contribution and Prince Albert, the Kaiser's son, left with the money last Saturday.

In addition to the war contribution the Germans borrowed $100,000, payable on September 20. But as the French had driven the Germans out before the debt became due, the city has lost that $100,000 also.

Besides Prince Albert, the Kaiser's son August Wilhelm was also at Rheims.

Saxe-Meiningens Stricken by War

Rome, Sept. 19.—The ducal house of Saxe-Miningen has been sorely stricken by the war. Prince Frederick, the grand duke's brother, and his son, Prince Ernest, have both been killed. The Princess Frederick is dying from the shock of losing her husband and son as well as her cousin and a nephew. The house of Lippe has also lost three princes.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE MANY MEN, GUNS AND STORES IN GALICIA

The sixth day of the battle of the Aisne river in Eastern France closed last night with allies and Germans still locked in a series of ferocious engagements along a fighting front of 120 miles, with the whole German invasion undoubtedly hanging on the result of the present conflict.

The official bulletins, reduced yesterday to even grimmer and briefer form than heretofore, showed that the fighting was still too desperate for broad results to be drawn. The mortality, beyond question, is appalling. Estimated losses—killed, wounded and missing—run as high as 150,000 for the six days.

The allies give their own losses as 50,000 and estimate those of the Germans at 100,000.

Each side has reinforcements, most of them fresh troops. The Germans, taking up entrenched positions east of the Oise river and north of the Aisne, are fighting with every ounce of their command to hold their ground and to press back the furious charges of the allies.

Military experts have said that if the German lines are turned, cut or broken now, it will mean that the Kaiser's armies will be rolled back over the frontier and into the shelter of the fortifications of the Rhine valley.

The allies realize, it is thought, that a second onrush of the Germans may not be stopped this time until they reach the very fortifications of Paris.

The whole battle line is a series of engagements, with continuous bombardment of Rheims by the Germans and particularly violent fighting near Noyons, on the German right, as main features. The French claim to have captured a German flag at Noyon and many prisoners on Craonne plateau. The Germans admit "some loss" at Noyon. The shelling of Rheims has caused many fires in the city, but Paris declares the German lines gained no advance. Berlin reports 2,500 French prisoners taken in the storming of Beaumont (Ardennes). In general Berlin maintains that all allied attacks have been repulsed, despite French claims of an advance at the centre, with continued retreat of the Crown Prince's army.

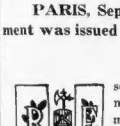
In Galicia, the Russians have captured Siniava and Sambor. The Austrian rear guard has been repulsed and driven over the river San. Many prisoners have been taken and a large amount of stores. On the German front no fighting has occurred.

The latest estimate from the Russian War Office places the Austrian losses at 350,000 men and 400 cannon.

PARIS, Sept. 19.—The following official statement was issued at 11 o'clock tonight:

[OFFICIAL]

On our left wing we have taken a flag south of Noyon. After a severe engagement on the plateau of Craonne, we took many prisoners belonging to the Twelfth and Fifteenth Corps and the Prussian Guards.



Prince Coat of Arms.

The Germans, who, in spite of extremely violent attacks, were unable to gain any ground around Rheims, have bombarded the cathedral all day. The situation, as a whole, is unchanged.

At the centre we have advanced on the western side

CASES WHICH LED TO BREACH BETWEEN JUDGE KING AND DISTRICT ATTORNEY PELLETIER

Jurist Showed a Disposition to Overrule Recomendations, Disregarding the General Practice.

Judge Henry Amasa King of Springfield, with whom District-Attorney Pelletier had a run-in last week, came back to Massachusetts from Troy back in the 90's, five years after he had been the unsuccessful candidate for a place on the New York Supreme bench. In New York judges are elected. Here they are named by the Governor and confirmed by his Councillors. Governor Guild picked Mr. King for the Superior Court in 1907.

Ever since the rupture between the officer, and recommended that the District Attorney's office and Judge King—the District Attorney's "office," because the District Attorney did not appear in the matter personally—citizens have been asking just what caused it.

THE AMERICAN presents today, for the first time in print, some of the incidents which preceded the sensational outbreak of the District Attorney that no further cases will be tried or disposed of before Judge King in the Criminal Court of this county.

So many cases pour into the office of the District Attorney for Suffolk every year that to try them all would require fifty assistant district attorneys, a hundred judges and forty or fifty courtrooms. These figures are, of course, exaggerated, for the excellent reason that nobody knows just what provisions would have to be made if judges, as a rule, were not prepared to act upon the suggestions of the District Attorney after his office has patiently made the customary inquiries.

THE OFFICIAL FIGURES.

To quote from official figures, on file and accessible to everybody, the number of cases handled last year by the District Attorney's office was 3,137.

No less than 2,213 people, fined or sentenced by the lower courts had "appealed" to the upper courts. Most of these cases involved minor offenses.

The District Attorney's office looks into all these "appeals," calls upon the probation officers for the facts, talks with wives, husbands, fathers, mothers and employers, and prepares to handle groups of them in bulk.

The custom has been for the Judge to permit such handling of petty matters, relying upon the ability and the integrity of the District Attorney's office to handle them diligently and wisely.

Judge King, on the contrary, showed a disposition to overrule these things, to overrule the Assistant District Attorneys, to catechize the respondents.

For example, Judge King had a break with Assistant District Attorney Henry P. Fielding over the case of Roy Smith, eighteen years old, charged with gaming on the Lord's Day.

RECOMMENDED $10 FINE.

Young Smith had been fined $10 in the lower court and had taken an appeal. Mr. Fielding reported that he had looked into the matter personally, with the aid of a probation officer, and recommended that the lower court fine be imposed.

Judge King finally acted upon this particular suggestion, but said to the boy: "I am inclined to fine you $20 because you appealed your case."

The case of James W. Kerrigan was along the same line. Kerrigan was charged with larceny of a revolver, and with "carrying" the weapon. He pleaded guilty but asked for a few days' time in "consult counsel."

"Why do you want time?" asked Judge King. "What do you want counsel for? I WON'T BELIEVE YOU ANY MORE A WEEK FROM NOW THAN I WILL TODAY."

Mr. Fielding insisted that the man be given five days' time and after some argument this was granted.

But these were unimportant compared to other cases, several of which the district attorney's office withdrew rather than permit Judge King to dispose of them.

Effie Pritchard, twenty-five years old, was sent to the Reformatory at Sherborn at the age of seventeen. Her home, the probation officer reported, is "indifferent." Her marriage was unhappy. The husband is somewhere in the West. One year ago she was brought in for making her home with the chauffeur of one of the officials of the Elevated. Placed on probation, she was recently brought in again.

EVIDENCE NOT OVER-STRONG.

"It appears to me," Mr. Fielding said, "that the evidence gathered by the police is not over-strong. Her chances before a jury would be better than good."

A probation officer reported in the girl's favor.

"If she had a home," said the Assistant District Attorney, "I should recommend probation. Instead, I suggest a House of Correction sentence of six months."

"Why are you in court so conspicuously dressed?" Judge King demanded of the prisoner. And then he said: "You are beyond redemption. I have no hope of your reformation."

INSISTS ON SENTENCE.

"May it please the Court," interposed Fielding, "that would hardly be fair in view of the fact that she pleaded guilty because of our promise to recommend six months in the House of Correction."

Judge King—Mr. District Attorney, you have no right to enter into such an agreement with the defendant.

Fielding—Your Honor, on behalf of the District Attorney's office I followed a practice well recognized and quite usual in this county. Does Your Honor still intend to sentence this woman to Sherborn?

Judge King—I do.

Mr. Fielding—May she withdraw her plea of guilty?

Judge King—She may not.

Mr. Fielding—Then, Your Honor, I withdraw my motion for sentence at this time.

Effie Pritchard stepped down, and Effie Pritchard is one of 18 September prisoners still held in Charles street jail because of the break between Pelletier and King.

JOHN NIHAN'S CASE.

On another afternoon, the case of John J. Nihan was up. Charge, drunkenness. Sentence, the State Farm for an "indefinite period."

Asking for the papers in the case, Mr. Fielding found a recommendation inclosed from Ralph Hallett, Esq., one of his associates in the office.

Fielding thereupon asked to see the papers in all the pending cases where recommendations had been made by the office.

Said Judge King—"I am inclined to impose the lower court sentences in all these cases."

He referred to cases wherein probation officers or district attorney's office had made recommendations. The charge against practically all these defendants was drunkenness.

"Then I shall not move for sentence in any of these cases," said Mr. Fielding, "Until my associates who make these recommendations have an opportunity to be heard on them."

The following Monday morning Assistant District Attorney Thomas J. Lavelle went into the detention pen, accompanied by a probation officer, for the purpose of making a second inquiry and to see the defendants personally. As a result, none of the cases were nolle prossed by the District Attorney. Which means that the District Attorney "declined to prosecute."

BREAK NO SURPRISE.

All the time the District Attorney's office and the honorable Court appeared to newspaper men to be getting farther and farther apart. The break, when it came, was a surprise to none of the reporters at the court house.

The charge against Joseph Mitchell was vagrancy. In seven years Mitchell had been arrested thirteen times for drunkenness. Investigation showed that this time he had a job to go to.

Assistant District Attorney Fielding recommended that Mitchell be placed on probation. A probation officer polished the recommendation.

"Vagrancy" was also charged against Patrick Doyle. Doyle's plea of guilty. Mr. Lavelle recommended that the case be "placed on file." When Judge King insisted upon a sentence, Mr. Lavelle nolle prossed Drug case, too.

There were several incidents of the sort, while Judge King was on the bench September 8, 10, 11, 14 and 15. The Assistant District Attorneys reported from time to time to their chief and, finally, on the afternoon of the 15th, District Attorney Pelletier made his sensational statement to the public, and the September term of the Criminal Court was at an end.

180 KEPT IN JAIL.

The 180 prisoners have been kept in jail to be arraigned sometime in the first week of October.

"It would be impossible, District Attorney Pelletier said, "to dispose of all cases in jail as Judge King was proceeding unless some additional judges were assigned. I regret that there should be any delay in the Superior Court who would make necessary my decision to present no further cases, but prisoners are entitled to some consideration and the suggestions of the District Attorney and his assistants are also entitled to some consideration."

5 HORSES PERISH, 2 MEN BURNED IN 3-ALARM FIRE

Batchelder Bros. Stable, South Boston, in Flames, 42 Animals Are Rescued.

Three alarms were sounded, five horses burned to death, forty-one more rescued by two men who were burned, in the stable fire of Batchelder Brothers, at No. 136 First street, South Boston, yesterday afternoon.

The cause was unknown and the damage was estimated at $6,000. The fire was confined to the three-and-a-half story wooden building occupied as the stable. All the horses were in their stalls, on account of the Saturday half-holiday.

J. J. Cheever of No. 184 L street, South Boston, and Edward Carr, rushed into the stable when their attention was attracted by the smoke and the neighing of the horses. When they opened the door some of the horses dashed into the street, endangering the lives of pedestrians. The rescuers ran into the stable, and throwing feed bags over the heads of the remaining horses to quiet their fear, led them to the street. Cheever was burned about the arms. Carr was burned on the head.

Three alarms were sounded as a precautionary measure, owing to the congested district in which the burned stable was located.

Straw Hats Hunted in Randolph Riot

RANDOLPH, Sept. 19.—There was a straw hat riot here today. Forty boisterous boys, stickless for straw hats, smashed every straw lid that ventured within the precincts. Protests or tears on the part of the owners were wasted.

Even the police department pleaded helplessness in the face of the stampede. Straw hats were demolished in the square, on side streets, and the mob of wreckers even boarded the trolley cars. Panamas, imitation and of value, shared the same fate as the stiff brimmers.

ALDERMAN IN LAWRENCE SHOT IN ACCIDENT

J. F. Todd Wounded by Rifle Which He Was Using to Kill Rats.

Alderman John F. Todd, Commissioner of Public Health of Lawrence, while handling a small rifle used by him to kill rats shot himself through the breast and lung late this afternoon in the smoking room at the City Home, where he lives.

He was discovered unconscious by one of the attendants passing through the room and was immediately taken to the City Hospital connected with the City Home, where his condition is regarded as serious. Medical Examiner George W. Jaynes after viewing the scene of the shooting, declared that it was accidental.

News of the accident was given out by Superintendent Wylde of the hospital about an hour after it happened. It was at first denied. Mrs. Todd, who is matron of the home, was prostrated over the accident.

Commissioner Todd is serving the second year of his term and is up for re-election as alderman.

Government Seizes Paper at Winnipeg

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 19.—King Magee, editor of the Winnipeg Saturday Post, was arrested today at the instigation of the military authorities here and taken to Fort Osborne. The office of the Saturday Post has been taken over by the authorities and the further distribution of the paper stopped. The arrest of the editor is supposed to be the result of an article concerning Valcartier camp at Quebec and Colonel Samuel Hughes, an officer of the Canadian army.

Walks 100 Miles a Week

Here is an unsolicited letter which tells what a real walker thinks of Cat's Paw Cushion Rubber Heels. Think of walking 100 miles every week —5200 miles in a year—that man ought to know something about shoes and heels.

The Higgins Leather Co. 1107 Franklin Avenue

Gentlemen:—

Our attention was recently called to a letter from a man who has walked steadily 15 years past. Frank D. Briggs, a writer with more than a local reputation, has been hereby a user of your heels, this walker, "the C'leary of the west", walks on an average of 100 miles per week, or 5200 miles per year, without conditions making no appreciable difference.

His shoemaker instructions about one year ago he says he put on a pair of your heels on the left side of that make of heel and placed a pair of "Cat's Paw" heels on the right side, for comparative trial. He says he states that the heels were so much longer than the other that he will not put on any other heel after having used but "Cat's Paw". For long, hard work he says he has never had a heel that has given him the satisfaction that "Cat's Paw" have.

This is only another instance of the exceptional way of "Cat's Paw" heels — in fact we do not know of a harder wear of heels, and we thought the statement might be of interest to you.

Do not fail to write this statement to you and it was perfectly agreeable that we should use it in connection with our advertising, because of the Foster Pristine Flex, which prevents slipping and preserves rubber qualities, that he would be more than pleased to have us do so.

Very truly yours,
The Foster Rubber Co.
W. F. Higgins '97

This experience is typical of millions who have found that Cat's Paw Heels make walking easier and safer. They make good because made right. Cost no more than ordinary kinds. 50 cents attached. All dealers everywhere

'HELLO' GIRLS 'RAGTIME' TO GO TO PELLETIER

Neighbors Who Object to Night Piano Recitals Have Started a Fuss.

Mrs. Catherine Preston of No. 20 St. Germain street says she is going to take the telephone girls' piano up to District Attorney Pelletier.

Not the piano, literally, of course, but the question of whether the "Hello" maidens in the Back Bay exchange on Belvidere street shall play "rag" and other time on their piano in the exchange rest room at midnight.

Between "tricks" at the busy switchboards the telephone girl likes to tickle the piano. It is a pleasant change from "Number, please" and "Line's busy. Shall I call you?"

But Mrs. Preston and others say the midnight piano murders sleep.

"I have made four different complaints to the telephone company without getting satisfaction," says Mrs. Preston, "and I am going to lodge a complaint at the District Attorney's office Monday morning."

LODGERS MOVE AWAY.

Mrs. Herbert I. Nickerson lives at No. 16 St. Germain street. Her husband is a policeman. She said it is sometimes hard to sleep in rear rooms of her house on account of that piano.

Other anti-piano interviews include these:

Mrs. William H. Preble, No. 18 St. Germain street: "I have protested against the noise."

Mrs. R. M. Young, No. 42 St. Germain street: "One of my neighbors lost two lodgers on account of the night piano playing."

Mrs. O'Connor, who did live at No. 27 Belvidere street, next door to the exchange, has moved to No. 15. The piano is to blame.

John J. Dooling at No. 22 St. Germain, doesn't seem to mind the piano. He says: "Let 'em have their good times, poor things. They have to work like the rest of us. Why should we stop their little music if it pleases 'em."

One of the telephone girls gives their side. She said:

"You don't know how terribly lonesome it is at night without the piano going. Of course, we don't want to keep people awake—but there must be some awfully light sleepers around here."

A telephone official said yesterday that he would look into the matter at once.

SNAPSHOT OF THE GOVERNOR AS HE LEFT THE HOSPITAL

Governor Walsh, with fractured arm in sling, was "caught" by a camera as he was leaving yesterday for an auto ride, his first since

Gov. Walsh Is Out for Auto Spin

He was taken for an hour's spin in an auto by his brother, Major Thomas L. Walsh and Judge Thomas P. Riley of Malden. The Governor was in the best of spirits and looked anything but an invalid.

He drank in the bracing Fall air and remarked that it seemed fine to be outdoors again.

For so active and athletic a young man thirteen days in a hospital has been anything but pleasant in spite of the care he has received at the private institution.

But he enjoyed only brief freedom, as he had to return to the hospital before dark. The outing, however, conclusively showed that the chief executive is mending rapidly and now out of danger of complications from the fractured arm.

The Governor will not be discharged from the hospital until Wednesday, when he will go to his home in Clinton. He will remain there a fortnight or more.

Beatrice Webster Is Bride at Waltham

Wedding Gown, Made in China, Gift of Groom's Brother.

Miss Beatrice Webster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Finch Webster of No. 24 Harris street, Waltham, became the bride last evening of Fred William Morrill of Haverhill, M. I. T. '07, at the home of her parents. A sister of the bride, Mrs. Edwin A. Eaton, was matron of honor, and Arthur B. Morrill, a brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were Reginald Webster and Gilbert Small of Waltham and Philip E. Morrill and Carl Morrill of Haverhill.

The gown worn by the bride was a gift from the groom's brother, who recently came from a three years' stay in China. The dress was of white satin with pearl and hand worked lace trimmings. The lace was worked into Chinese characters, reading "Much happiness and a long life."

Mr. and Mrs. Morrill will reside in West Roxbury.

Congregational ministers' meeting, which will open for the season Monday, September 21, in Pilgrim Hall, special reference will be called to the day and its observance urged upon all churches.

Asks Weeks to Work for Boston Harbor

President Martin of Realty Exchange Appeals to Senator.

President John J. Martin of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange has written U. S. Senator John W. Weeks, urging that Boston's need for a forty-foot channel be insisted on in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill. He writes:

"All Boston and all Massachusetts are concerned gravely with the proposition which seeks to eliminate from the rivers and harbors bill the vitally necessary appropriation for Boston. No steps should remain unTaken by anyone who is concerned with the welfare of Boston, Massachusetts and New England to prevent the elimination of this imperative appropriation for the needs of Boston Harbor. A port of the significance and proportions of Boston must not under any circumstances suffer at the hands of unimportant localities which can well afford to wait."

DO NOT WANT HARRY THAW AS NEIGHBOR

Concord "Best Families" Would Prevent Prisoner from Hiring a Residence.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—A lot of Concord's "best families" have adopted an attitude of "watchful waiting" since Harry Thaw sent his secretary down from Durham the other day to see about leasing a house here for the Winter.

The citizens in question are preparing to bring strong pressure to bear on any real estate man who undertakes to lease Thaw a house in their neighborhood. One well known man said frankly in a discussion here today:

"I don't want Thaw as my neighbor. I guess he's a pleasant enough fellow, and all that, but—"

Harry Rice, Thaw's secretary, came down here last week to make some inquiries. It is said Thaw thinks well of the Barton T. Jenks house on Merrimac street. But no definite steps toward leasing the house have been taken. Thaw is waiting to see what the Supreme Court does about his case when it comes up early in October.

Thaw is at present in Durham. An attempt to get him on the telephone today drew the information that he was automobiling with his mother, Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, who came up from Pittsburgh Friday. Deputy Stevens, Thaw's guard, went with the party, as always.

Thaw, it is understood, is in no hurry to come back to Concord, as the weather in Durham is still mild and delightful.

Thaw's case will come up in the Supreme Court on the first Tuesday in October. The State of New York will then move that it be brought up on the calendar. George S. Morris of Lancaster and former Governor Stone of Pennsylvania will be there to represent Thaw. If the case is brought up on the calendar it will be put at the foot of the advanced list. Merrill Shurtleff, Thaw's attorney in Lancaster, was asked when that would bring it up for hearing and decision.

"On the advanced list," Shurtleff said, "it would come up in about six months. Otherwise, not for a year and a half."

Ocean Freight on Apples Reduced

George P. Wilder, manager of a large forwarding house and a member of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, makes the reassuring statement to fruit growers of the State that the ocean freight rate between Boston and Liverpool on apples will be eighteen cents a barrel less than last year. Already one hundred and sixty-five more barrels of apples have been sent abroad than for the was the case last year at this time.

How Explorer Won on Heart Cruise

TOLD LOVE LIKE KNIGHT ERRANT

PRINCELY GIFTS OF RARE GEMS

Bride to Share Perils of the Wilds

MRS. MILLWARD, EXPLORER'S BRIDE.

"Whither thou goest I will go," was the pledge of Edna Boyden of Bryantville and Boston when she agreed to marry Russell H. Millward, American explorer, and they were married August 27 in St. Paul's Cathedral. The romantic story of her pledge came to light yesterday.

Millward, two years ago, was engaged to another girl—Madeleine Sylvester of Woodmere, L. I. He was planning a South American exploration and wished the girl to marry him and go with him into the wilds. But she, persuaded by her parents, refused.

It was Miss Boyden's love of out-of-doors, her woodcraft and her staunch loyalty which Millward treasured when he sought her promise to marry him. The story of his courtship reads like a tale of the knight errants of old.

The couple are now on a honeymoon trip. Here is the story of their courtship, as told by friends in Bryantville:

"Miss Edna Boyden has been coming to Pembroke for the Summer for several years. She was formerly a Brockton girl. Josiah P. Boyden, her father, is employed in New York as an automobile salesman and the Boydens live at No. 3665 Broadway.

"Miss Edna had been staying at the Boyden Summer cottage, 'Pleasden's Bee Hive Bungalow,' for several weeks when, about the middle of August, she received a telegram from young Millward saying, 'Arrive in Boston tonight; will be down for the week-end.'

"Upon his arrival Miss Edna was not over-enthusiastic so far as any outward expression of feeling was concerned, and she treated him with almost exasperating coolness.

"He was an odd attic, all right, and insisted upon sleeping out of doors in the hammock all the while he was here. Millward would get up early every morning and go for a sixteen-mile walk before breakfast.

"He told us confidentially that he had known Miss Boyden for two years and that it was nearly two years before she condescended to even smile upon him.

"He brought as a gift to Miss Boyden an ancient east gold, locket-like pendant and chain which he said were more than fifteen hundred years old and which probably belonged to some ancient Inca dame in Peru. He told us that he had been offered $5,000 for the locket by Mrs. Astor of New York, and said that it was the most perfect specimen of its kind yet discovered.

"He told a friend here that Miss Boyden would accompany him back to New York as his wife or he would go away and never trouble her again —burying himself from the world in his South American explorations. On Sunday, August 23, he proposed marriage to Miss Boyden and was turned down with a firmness that would have been final to a less courageous man. Still he persisted.

"By sheer stick-to-it-iveness, Millward finally swept away every barrier which may have previously taken possession of Miss Boyden's mind, and was accepted in his proposal of August 26. This is a little inside history, but Millward is found of his heart success and has a right to be.

Brockton Boy Wins Trade Slogan Prize

BROCKTON, Sept. 19.—The Brockton Chamber of Commerce sought a slogan to express the city's commercial vim. They invited every resident to compete. R. C. Aiken, a boy, won the $10 prize. His slogan, which will be officially adopted, is: "The City of Workers and Winners." There were 1,000 slogans submitted.

Mrs. W. C. Story Is Coming to Boston

Mrs. William Cumming Story of New York, president-general of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, is coming to Boston on November 20, as the guest of honor of the Massachusetts D. A. R. She will attend the conference on that date, to be held in the Arlington Street Church.

OPTIMISM HIGH AT DEMOCRATIC GET-TOGETHER

Yesterday's get-together meeting of the Democratic State Committee was held in a parlor lighted exclusively with sunshine. The air was perfumed with American Beauty roses. A cool breeze kissed the cheeks of statesmen. Songbirds perched high on chandeliers, gave a continuous performance.

To tell the bare truth the meeting was held upstairs in the Quincy House, but it was the coolest and most enthusiastic ever.

Assistant Attorney General Hey declared that "we are going to win because we've got the issues and the power." John F. McDonald forecasted a Boston plurality for Walsh of rising 25,000. Judge Riley called the Governor "Democracy's best asset."

Major Thomas L. Walsh brought greetings from the Governor, and said he and Judge Riley were about to take His Excellency from the hospital for a ride through the parkways.

Adhering to his resolution of last year, Major Walsh said, the Governor will accept no campaign contribution "which carries, suggests or implies any obligation on his part."

The Governor's broken arm is mending so slowly that he may be unable to take part in the approaching campaign. This as yet to be determined.

The keynote of the meeting was "get them out and see that they are registered."

PENNY LUNCHES ARE URGED FOR BOSTON SCHOOLS

Penny lunches for Boston public school children has been urged upon Superintendent Dyer by Dr. Kate H. Sprague of Cincinnati, who held a conference yesterday with him on the subject.

Dr. Sprague gives the following tables:

CINCINNATI PENNY LUNCHES	BOSTON SCHOOL LUNCHES
Cup of cocoa..... 1c	Cup of cocoa..... 2c
Chopped lard, sand-	Chopped lam sand-
wich..... 1c	wich..... 2c
Molasses sandwich.. 1c	Molasses sandwich.. 2c
Plate of soup..... 5c	Plate of soup..... 5c

Dr. Sprague wants Boston to join the chain of cities in the United States which are adopting penny luncheons. When Dr. Dyer was superintendent of schools in Cincinnati he approved of the plan and saw its practical working.

"I am here in this city in the interests of penny luncheons," said Dr. Sprague. "We have demonstrated their need in our city, especially in the congested districts. We want Boston to join us in this important movement for the health of the average child. We have the support of the school board. Our cooks are paid $6 a week, and this is met by private subscriptions from the Woman's Civic League.

"The need of these penny luncheons is evident. You can't teach hungry children. Often a child gets up and does not feel like eating, but the mother will hustle it off to school without any breakfast. That child once in school is not in a fit condition to receive any instruction.

"When the teacher finds out that it has had nothing to eat it can be sent to the penny lunch counter and there get a morsel of food for a penny.

Boys Who Broke Up Meeting Are Fined

Four boys, all under fifteen, were fined $10 each in Charlestown Court for disturbing a religious meeting. They were William H. O'Connell, John O'Hara and William Cahill, all of Charlestown, and Walter Flynn of Roxbury. After reprimanding them, Judge Sullivan suspended the fines and placed the boys on probation till March 12.

Rev. E. E. Marsh, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church on High street, Charlestown, told in court that last Sunday evening while he was preaching, the boys entered the church and created such a disturbance by mocking him.

Bailey's "Won't Slip" Rubber Heels

The tread surface formed with "V" shaped ribs, together with tapered rubber studs, form a suction that prevents non-slipping.

The studs being on the heel of the boot are a permanent flexible cushion that forces the centre of the heel on the surface, where it belongs.

These are made from the toughest flexible rubber, and being formed in this shape are lighter and more durable than if solid, and will outwear two pairs of other makes, which has been proved by thousands of wearers.

RICH MEN FACE EXPOSURE IN SCHENCK CASE

Fickinger Swears He Was Hired to Kill Woman He Tried to Avenge.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—One more tragic chapter in the story of Florence Schenck, the beautiful Virginia society girl who died last January, is likely to be unfolded when Fredrick Fickinger, alias Schultz, son, it is said, of a millionaire railroad man and formerly a prosperous stock speculator and broker, is placed on trial on the charge of shooting Charles H. Wilson, the whip for Alfred G. Vanderbilt.

Schultz, as he is registered in the White Plains jail, was arraigned today before Justice of the Peace Moorehouse in the village of Greenburgh, Westchester County, on the charge of criminal assault on the Vanderbilt stable manager. He was ordered held without bail.

Fickinger, who shot Wilson in the foot after the horse show at White Plains last Thursday, is now busily preparing memoranda to be used at his trial in an attempt to prove the charge he made to Deputy Sheriff Monte Kelsey just after he had fired five shots at Wilson, that he had been hired to kill the latter by young Schenck's mother, whose elopement with the elderly horse trainer, subsequent desertion, downfall and death formed one of the most pathetic romances of its kind.

It was considered almost certain by Sheriff Wilhelm and Doyle and other investigators that names of men more prominent than Wilson will be brought into the case.

NEW NAME MENTIONED.

The name of another man came out in connection with the activities of Fickinger as a divorce detective. This man is a millionaire importer, with homes in ew York and Paris.

Walter Kelly, stable manager for Wilson, was the only witness today. He told of the shooting and his part in the arrest of Fickinger. He said that just after Wilson had been shot, he cried:

"Why did you do that?"

"I meant to kill but I am glad I didn't. Shooting is too good for you," Kelly quoted Fickinger as replying.

At the conclusion of Kelly's testimony it was announced that the state rested.

After the hearing Fickinger said he did not wish bail because the jail was the safest place for him.

"I shall be glad to tell my story when time comes," he said. "Wilson has been harrassing and hounding me. The Schenck affair, of course, is behind it. You know for the last year of that poor girl's life I was her only friend and protector."

PRISONER ADMITS IDENTITY.

It was only last night that the prisoner admitted that he is the Frederick Fickinger who was well known in society circles in New York some time ago. He refused to discuss the freaks of fortune that made him accept employment as a divorce detective. Nor would he explain why he tries in his diary and papers found in his possession which revealed him as an agent of wealthy and unscrupulous men.

Wilson, accompanied by a gayly attired chap who introduced himself as Count Gregory, appeared in Sheriff Doyle's office yesterday and inquired with keen interest what letters and papers had been found upon his assailant. One of these letters had been addressed by the prisoner to District Attorney Whitman and referred to a matter other than the Wilson-Schenck case. It follows:

LETTER TO WHITMAN.

No. 265 West Forty-second street, New York, Aug. 5, 1914.

District Attorney Charles S. Whitman:

Dear Sir—I state below a condition of affairs which, in my belief, deserves the careful attention of your office.

The charges are bribery, attempted and subornation of perjury and the principals are a wealthy man trying to divorce his wife on framed up evidence.

A firm of shyster lawyers, who for some years have made a specialty of divorces, and myself as a private detective operative.

I feel entirely that an innocent woman is being wronged and am willing to disclose all the details.

On May 26, 1914, I was employed by the attorneys to secure divorce evidence against the said woman. The man in question wanted to marry a prominent actress after securing the divorce from his wife and the evidence was to be secured at any cost and with great expedition.

The lawyers said that the wife was guilty of misconduct with a chauffeur, but upon investigation I proved this report false and so reported.

I was informed by my employers that I should secure witnesses who could be fixed, and get affidavits that they had seen the woman in a hotel. They would allow up to $1,000 for three affidavits.

I saw several persons and my work has born fruit.

I trust that your investigation of this matter will result in the cleansing of the bar of undesirable characters.

Yours very truly,

LYNN CAR RUNS WILD INTO BARN, FOUR ARE HURT

Peabody Trolley Takes Open Switch at Wyoma; Collision Follows.

Four persons were injured, one man seriously, when a Peabody bound trolley, carrying forty passengers, took an open switch last night and crashed into several cars in the Wyoma carbarn.

THE INJURED

Motorman Fred B. Morse, No. 295 Euclid avenue, Lynn.

Mrs. Bessie Friedman, No. 21 Sanborn avenue, Peabody.

George Androdros, No. 48 Wallace street, Peabody.

All were rushed to the Lynn Hospital. Motorman Morse was later sent to his home. He is the most seriously injured. He was thrown over the dasher of the open car, which was returning from Lynn. He struck on his head. He suffered internal injuries and his spine was hurt. The others were bruised and shaken up.

Mrs. Friedman, after treatment at the Lynn hospital, walked a mile to the police station in search of her groceries, which were later found in the entrance.

Motorman Morse had only five weeks' experience. He was looking for the signal light when the car suddenly swerved into the switch, which should have been closed. He dove for dear life as the emergency brakes the crowded trolley bumped into three cars on a siding in the barn, damaging them and itself and sending the last of the string crashing through the rear wall of the barn.

WOMAN BADLY INJURED AS CAR RUNS INTO AUTO

Another Auto Accident Follows Within Half Hour at Alger's Corner, Eastondale.

WEST BRIDGEWATER, Sept. 19. — Two automobile accidents occurred within a half-hour at Alger's Corner, Eastondale, today.

Miss Sarah E. Codding, teacher in the public schools in Taunton, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. L. B. Codding of Cochesset, was seriously injured when a trolley car crashed into her automobile.

Miss Codding was suffering probable internal injuries. Her head was cut and bruised, her left ankle sprained and her wrist was almost broken. She was unconscious several hours. She narrowly escaped death.

She had brought her brother to the car. He got out and, in turning, Miss Codding stalled her car in the track. Motorman George Lake did his best to avoid the collision. He put on the emergency brake but the car was too near the auto and Miss Codding did not have time to jump. Pedestrians were startled by the crash. The automobile was crushed and dragged twenty feet. In tipping, it pinned Miss Codding under it.

She was carried to the Horace H. Alger homestead where Dr. A. C. Helmore treated her. The Rev. William Dacey of Randolph hurried to the Codding home and carried the girl's parents to the Alger home. His left hind machine in the road and another automobile crashed into it while the road was congested.

Father Ducey's car was badly damaged. The car that struck it was a roadster driven by a woman who fainted. It was feared she was injured but her male companion drove her off before their identity could be established.

Miss Codding's father is pastor of the Cochesset Methodist Church.

Wallace Sweetser of Wakefield, is in a critical condition at his home at the corner of Salem and Main streets, Wakefield, being run down yesterday afternoon by an automobile owned and operated by William W. Crosby of Arlington. The boy was picked up unconscious and taken to his home nearby by Mr. Crosby. His injuries consist of a bad scalp wound, a broken left arm and it is feared he is hurt internally.

AMERICAN DOLLARS FOR American Pay Envelopes

Andrew Is Forced to Stay Down

A. Platt Andrew, of Marblehead, placed his trust in a machine yesterday and was disappointed. So now he's more anti-machine than ever.

Mr. Andrew is the anti-machine candidate for Congress to succeed Captain Augustus Peabody Gardner. Andrew used to be something or other in the treasury department. He has oodles of money, as Captain Gardner has.

Yesterday Mr. Andrew was to have aided high, front point to point in the Sixth District, in an aeroplane, positively the first campaign tour of that kind in the history of Bay State politics.

It didn't come off. From Marblehead up to Merrimacport thousands waited for the Darius Green of politics, but he didn't show.

The machine ran down on the anti-machine candidate.

Mr. Andrew was ready, the crowds were waiting, but the machine bucked.

The anti-Gardner candidate issued a lengthy statement last night putting it up to the builders and hinting at dark things. He said they notified him at the eleventh hour that they had sold the machine originally reserved for the record-breaking swing around the circle. When he called with his attorneys, he declares, another machine was arranged for. This was the machine that didn't quit out yesterday. The makers blame "atmospheric conditions."

All Mr. Andrew wants is the Republican nomination from Captain Gardner, and the Progressive nomination from Nelson R. Clark. He is positively not asking for the Democratic nomination, which will go to George Scofield of Ipswich or Hon. Donovan of Salem.

The Marblehead man had with him yesterday a list of all the Americans who have been helping American war refugees in London. He believes it to be significant that Captain Gardner's name is not on the list.

Three Killed as Trolley Hits Auto

BERLIN, Conn., Sept. 19.—Three persons were killed and two painfully injured when the automobile owned and driven by W. Gordon Brown, an instructor in the Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven, was struck by an electric train on the Middletown-Berlin line at the crossing near the Berlin brick yards, about 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The dead are Mrs. W. Gordon Brown, wife of the owner of the machine, and their two children, Ann, aged five years, and Forbes a three-year-old son.

74 PERISH AS LINER SINKS OFF OREGON

Only 2 Survivors; 30 Die in First Lifeboat; Second Capsizes; Steamer Turns Turtle.

ASTORIA, Ore., Sept. 19.—With a loss of life of at least seventy-four persons, the steamer Francis H. Leggett foundered yesterday afternoon in the heavy seas off the Oregon coast, sixty miles south of the Columbia River, and but two of those aboard are known to have been saved.

They are Alex. Farrell, brought into this port on the fleaver at noon today, and Charles Pullman, who is reported safe aboard the Buck, now outside off the Columbia River and which will enter port tomorrow. Three other steamers joined in the search for survivors.

Thirty perished when the first life boat was launched and eight were lost in the second, which also capsized. The majority of the passengers were below decks when the vessel went down. The seas had torn away her hatch coverings and filled her holds with water.

As the Leggett foundered she turned turtle. Farrell was on the bridge and was sucked down with the ship. When he came to the surface he was pulled to safety on a railroad tie by the ship's wireless operator, who was washed off during the night.

The first intimation of the disaster which reached the Beaver was a vague message from the Japanese warship Idzumo soon after dark Friday night.

Former Financier Segal Goes Insane

NEW ATTACK ON GIRL GIVES CLEW TO LYNN 'SLUGGER'

Young Woman Aids Police with Good Description of Assailant; Arrest Expected.

Miss Helen Ronan of No. 11 Woodman street, last night furnished the Lynn police with a detailed description of the "Jack-the-Slugger" who has been terrorizing women and girls in Lynn for weeks.

The suspect is thought to live in the West End of the city. An arrest is expected soon.

Miss Ronan was on her way home when brutally attacked within 200 yards of where an officer stood. The slugger knocked her down, stifled her cries and, she claims, kicker her in the breast.

Mrs. E. R. Hull of No. 149 Summer street, claims to have been attacked by a powerful man of dark complexion. He sprang at her from under the stairs when she went into her cellar at 10 in the morning. When she tried to defend herself, she claims the man stubbed her in the thigh and threw her a sum of money.

Many other women and girls in different parts of the city complain of the actions of a mysterious night prowler who has chased them and made insulting remarks.

Boy's Body Found Floating in Harbor

John J. Ellis of No. 7 New street, East Boston, discovered the body of a boy in the water between Governor's and Deer Islands. The boy wore a blue coat and knee trousers, gray sweater, brown stockings, low cut tan shoes, brown knit four-in-hand tie. The body was removed to City Hospital morgue. It is believed he lived in Medford and that his name was Bradford.

Watson Denies Charges of Rival

Opening at Roslindale square soon after supper, and closing at Tremont and Whitney streets, just before the Sabbath morn, City Councillor James A. Watson, aspirant for the Democratic nomination, spoke last night to 5,000 of his fellow citizens in the Roxbury-Jamaica Plain Congressional district.

Mr. Watson denied the statement made by Senator Frank J. Horgan, a rival candidate, that he voted against the establishment of municipal markets. He produced City Council records to show that he issued an order relative to the establishment of such markets.

HALL CAINE DISCUSSES AMERICA'S NEUTRALITY

QUESTIONS HUMANITY IN THE STAND BY AMERICANS IN GREAT FIGHT FOR RIGHT AND JUSTICE

England Forced Into War by Every Clause in Moral Code Among Nations: Spurned Infamous Trade to Escape Conflict.

to be in it by every clause of the moral code which regulates the relation of nation to nation or yet man to man.

Let me first clear the ground with a few flat contradictions.

It is a lie, and a stupid lie propagated by Germany, that we are in this war for the sake of Servia, and in support of that little, filthy conspiracy which led to the assassination of the Crown Prince of Austria. As long as the quarrel between Servia and Austria was the central heart of the trouble, the soul of England was unmoved. The government (especially the liberal government) which would have dared to propose that we should shed British blood on such an issue, would have been instantly hurled from office.

Our attitude toward the degrading muddle in Eastern Europe was about akin to that of a law-abiding tenant in a tenement house who has two quarrelsome fellow tenants at the farthest end of his flat, which they fight out their dirty differences." he thinks. "It is only for me to intervene when peaceful life becomes intolerable."

COMMON CAUSE.

Again, it is a lie that England is in this war for the sake of France, being compelled by secret obligations to support her against Germany, without regard to the justice of her quarrel. France is our friend, but we are free to stand by her or not, according as we thought best. France knew we were free, and guided her policy in the light of that knowledge. If England and France are fighting side by side, it is because they have a common cause, and have united themselves in the fight, not because they are a pair of international Siamese twins, who have deliberately bound themselves together in the dark.

Again, it is a lie that England has come into this war out of hatred and envy of Germany's prosperity. In no quarter of the world is Germany's commercial expansion a menace to British trade. With more reason we might say that Germany has entered into the war out of envy of England's colonies which might (if it were possible to Germanize them—it certainly is not) afford some necessary relief from the cramped position in which German industrial life is by nature compelled to live.

BRAZEN LIE.

Again, it is a lie, and a brazen lie, that Great Britain has entered into this conflict because she is afraid of Germany's strength and desires to crush it before it overwhelms her. If England had been afraid of Germany's strength, she could have escaped from the power of it by accepting her safety on Germany's own suggestion, at the price of an ignoble and almost treacherous neutrality.

"Only stand out of this war," said Germany to England, "and we guarantee your own and your neighbors' security on the seas."

Finally, it is a lie, and a preposterous and idiotic lie (though Professor Harnack seems to have been the first to promulgate it), that England is on this war because she hates and would like to destroy German culture, and throw in her lot with the ignorance and barbarity of a nation farther east.

How could England's success in arms disturb the spiritual and therefore imperishable contributions to the world's welfare that have come through Goethe, Wagner and Koch? And where lies the lure that would draw England back from her inheritance in Shakespeare and Milton to the blank poverty and sterility of the darkest of the middle ages?

Can it be supposed by any rational being that out of sheer envy of Germany's eminence in culture we wish to close German universities, put an end to German research, deprive ourselves and the world of the incalculable benefits conferred upon mankind by German medicine and surgery? How preposterous.

And having told you what we are not fighting for, let me say what we are fighting for.

"KEEPING OUR WORD."

First and foremost, we are fighting for the sanctity of our pledged word. We were confronted by the choice of breaking our pledge to a weaker nation to protect her, or by throwing ourselves into a cause that was sure only as the cause of justice is ours and that of every free nation in the world.

Long ago England and Germany became parties to a treaty providing that the independence of Belgium should be preserved. England has kept her word under that treaty; Germany has deliberately broken hers.

And it is just because England has kept her word that Germany has broken it, that England and Germany are now at war.

Now let us examine the moral question that lie behind the keeping and breaking of treaties in general and of the treaty in particular. Why was the treaty about Belgium made? In the first place because humanity recognizes the right of every distinct nationality to a separate existence.

In the next place the treaty about Belgium was made because history shows us that without the liberty that comes of independent existence, a nation can have no progress, no civilization, no true morality, no true faith, no true religion.

Now the geographical position of Belgium as a small country, being a perpetual temptation to both to encroach upon its borders in the hour of need. The Belgian treaty was made to guarantee its inviolability.

Well, Germany has broken the treaty it entered into. Why? It has given one reason, and only one. Because it was "necessary" to do so in order to carry out its plans, and "necessity knows no law." The German chancellor said this in plain words, making no other excuse or explanation.

And when Germany came to her with the shocking proposal that they agree to break their bargain over Belgium, Great Britain replied:

"To accept your infamous offer to trade with you in the liberty of a small nation, which we have both entered into solemn obligation to protect would be to cover the glorious name of England with undying shame."

Do you doubt England's sincerity? Do you believe the story from Germany that she was eager to rush into this war? Lest you do I will venture to raise the curtain on a private scene of this tremendous tragic drama.

DRAMATIC SCENE.

The day is the 4th of August; the place a room in the house of the British Prime Minister who, with three leading members of the Cabinet are waiting for the reply from Berlin to the ultimatum sent at noon. The time expires by European time at eleven o'clock.

The ministers cannot yet allow themselves to believe Germany will go to war.

They are waiting for the bell of the telephone to ring. It does not ring and the fingers of the clock are moving. The four men sit rigid, petrified, then comes through the stillness the deep boom of "Big Ben," the great clock at St. Stephens. "Boom, boom, boom." No one moves until the last of the eleven strokes has gone reverberating through the night. Then a sensible pause, and then a thick, hasty voice, heavy with emotion and yet firm with resolve, "It's war."

If I have done wrong in telling this thrilling little story, I ask forgiveness for the great purpose I now put it to—that of asking America if it was right(), if it was in haste, if it was in the heat of anger, if it was without an awful sense of their responsibility to England an dto humanity that the responsible ministers of Great Britain drew the sword, and having drawn it, in such mood as I have described, if they are ever likely to regret that they have thrown the scabbard away.

Gunman Suspect Taken at Bridgeport

Fabrizio Chillino, declared to have been an occupant of the car when Jennie Cavaglieri of Chicago was driven to her death in a lonely spot in Connecticut, and said to be a well known gunman in the New York, Philadelphia and Chicago underworld was brought to Boston under arrest yesterday. The arrest was made in Bridgeport, Ct., by Inspectors Galotti and Ryder of the Immigrant Bureau. Chillino may be deported as a criminal alien if this country illegally.

U. S. Haven for Mexico's Nuns and Monks

Full Report of Alleged Atrocities to Be Made by Bishop Conaty.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—It is reported from Sen. Girt that Secretary of War Garrison, to whom has been referred the question of bringing away the nuns and monks from Vera Cruz, will arrange for their departure to-day or to-morrow.

It is probable that when the transport arrives at Vera Cruz, these people may be taken away.

It appears certain that owing to the strong representations of General Funston there will be no hurry in the evacuation of Vera Cruz by his troops.

Stories of atrocities against nuns and nuns, which appeared well founded, have come from reliable sources to Bishop Conaty of Los Angeles and to the papal delegate at Washington and a full statement is to be made by Bishop Conaty at the request of the State Department.

The War Department announced today that with few exceptions Mexican prisoners who are interned at Fort Wilkanie and elsewhere on the border will eventually be released in this country.

The exceptions are Maximilio Castillo, the bandit who fired the tunnel at El Cumbre, in which fifty-eight persons were killed, and that of General Salazar, whose case is in the United States Courts.

5 Women Avoid Operations

For years we have been stating in the newspapers of the country that a great many women have escaped serious operations by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it is true.

We are permitted to publish in this announcement extracts from the letters of five women. All have been recently received unsolicited. Could any evidence be more convincing?

1. HOMOSOX, MD.—"I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached and I was so nervous I could not sleep, and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation, but I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman."—Mrs. Hayward Sowers, Hodgdon, Me.

2. CHARLOTTE, N. C.—"I was in bad health for two years, with pains in both sides and was very weak. I had a growth which the doctor said was a tumor, and I never would get well unless I had an operation. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I gladly say that I am now enjoying fine health."—Mrs. Rosa Sims, 16 Winona St., Charlotte, N. C.

3. HANOVER, PA.—"The doctor advised a severe operation, but my husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I experienced great relief in a short time. Now I feel like a new person and can do a hard day's work and not mind it."—Mrs. Ada Wilt, 196 Stock St., Hanover, Pa.

4. DECATUR, ILL.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. Laura A. Griswold, 2300 Bib. East William Street, Decatur, Ill.

5. CLEVELAND, OHIO.—"I was very irregular and for several years my side pained me so that I expected to have to undergo an operation. Doctors said they knew of nothing that would help me. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I became regular and free from pain. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. Griffith, 7305 Madison Av., Cleveland, O.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's vegetable compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does right to herself if she does not try this famous medicine made from roots and herbs, which contains no narcotic or harmful drugs; it has restored so many suffering women to health.

May Close Wireless at Siasconset

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—Secretary of the War Daniels said tonight that unless the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company makes prompt and satisfactory explanation in forwarding a message concerning supplies from the British Cruiser Suffolk to a British admiralty agent in New York, the station at Siasconset, Mass., will be closed.

Miss Clark Solves Cotton Problem

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.— Miss Genevieve E. Champ Clark, daughter of the speaker has inaugurated a movement of national importance which will go far towards solving the cotton situation. It is that American women adopt American fashions and use cotton fabrics freely in their evening dresses as well as in house dresses. Miss Clark further suggests that a week be set aside in October for a nation-wide bargain sale of cotton goods in the stores.

Capt. Grenffel, Polo Player, Among Dead

LONDON, Sept. 19.—In the official list of officers killed is the name of Captain Riversdale Grenffel, one of the leading polo players among those who have played in American. The list also contains the names of Captain Lord Guernsy and Captain Lord A. V. May, of the Irish Guards, Colonel F. R. F. Rolleau, of the general staff, who died from wounds, and Sir A. C. Ginson-Craig, of the Highland Light Infantry.

Prince Paul Murat, son of Prince Joachim Murat, has been wounded.

Corns Comes Off as Easy as You Please!

"Gets-It" Being Used by Millions

It is the first time that a real, sure-as-fate corn cure has ever been discovered. "GETS-IT" is the new corn-ender, based on an entirely new principle. It is a new, different formula, never successfully imitated. It makes corns scarce! and then vanish. Two drops do the work. You don't handle or put your toe any more with sticky tape and plasters that press down on the poor corn—no more flesh-eating salves that don't "stay put," no more aching of corns with knives or razors, no more bleeding danger of blood poison. No more limping around for days with sore corns, no more corn pains.

"GETS-IT" is now the biggest-selling corn cure in the world. Get it on any druggist's, or send $1 cents a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago. "GETS-IT" is sold in Boston by Rieser Arnes stores.

Armies in France Still Locked in Terrible Death Grapple--Begin Seventh Day of Battle

GERMANS LAUNCH REPEATED ASSAULTS ON ALLIES IN EFFORT TO SHIELD CROWN PRINCE'S ARMY

On our right wing there is nothing new. The general situation remains favorable.

At 3 o'clock the War Office issued an official statement in which it said:

"Our advance into Lorraine is steady.

"Summing up, two armies, strongly entrenched, are making partial attacks on each other on the whole front without a decisive result on either one side or the other."

BERLIN REPORTS "DECISIVE ATTACK"

By FREDERICK WERNER.

BERLIN, Sept. 19.—By wireless to Sayville, L. I.—The following official statement was issued at headquarters today:

(OFFICIAL.)

German coat of arms

"A decisive attack has been made by the Thirteenth and Fourth Corps and parts of other divisions south of Noyon. They suffered some loss.

"Beaumont (probably in the Ardennes region), has been stormed; 2,500 French prisoners have been captured.

"Attacks along the entire battle line have been easily repulsed. Number of guns and prisoners captured cannot be obtained yet.

"An invasion by Alpine riflemen over the Vosges into the Breisach valley has been repulsed."

"The German eastern army continues its operations in the district about Swalki, in Russian Poland. The army is now advancing on the fortress of Osowiec, twenty-eight miles southeast of Lyck on the railroad between Lyck and Bye-Iostok."

AUSTRIAN WARSHIP BEATEN IN SEA FIGHT

ROME, Sept. 19.—The Austrian dreadnaught Viribus Unitis was badly damaged in a naval battle in the Adriatic, according to a dispatch received from Vienna this afternoon. The Austrian warship, after she was damaged, fled from the allies' fleet to seek a safe harbor, the dispatch says.

GERMANS CHECKED IN THREE ATTACKS

(OFFICIAL)

French Coat of Arms.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—An official Bordeaux dispatch to the French embassy today says:

"The battle continues on the whole front from the River Oise to the River Woevre during the eighteenth, without any important change in the situation at any point.

"At the left, in the battle of the Oise, we occupy Menarqueglise, Carlepont and Cuts. On the heights to the north of the River Aisne we have advanced slightly in a few places. Three attacks attempted by the Germans against the English army have been checked at Troyon, between Soissons and Craonne. From Craonne to Rheims we have repulsed the attack executed during the night. The enemy tried, but has not succeeded in taking the offensive against Rheims.

"At the centre, from Rheims to the Argonne Mountains, the enemy is reinforcing his situation by important fortifications and taking an attitude merely defensive. On the east of the Argonne and in the Woevre valley the situation is unchanged.

GERMANS DRIVEN BACK SAYS LONDON

By HERBERT TEMPLE,
American Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—Little information as to the real status of the military operations in France was given in the official statement issued by the government press bureau this afternoon. It was as follows:

British Coat of Arms.

The situation remains unchanged. A night counter-attack against the first division (British troops) was driven back. The weather is bad. It is raining continuously.

The press bureau announcements show that the Germans are still concentrating their attacks against the British. The English troops are massed upon the left wing of the allied army, but are supported by French cavalry and artillery. So far the official information has indicated that the Germans are making their counter attacks under cover of darkness. This may be for the purpose of surprising the allies or it might be for the purpose of hiding the secret positions which the Germans hold. The inclement weather is having an equally bad effect upon the allies and the Germans.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE MANY MEN AND STORES

PETROGRAD, Sept. 19.—An official statement issued by the Russian General Staff tonight says:

Russian Coat of Arms

The Austrian rear guard has been repulsed at the River Vischnia and has been driven over the River San in the region of Radymo and Medynka. The Austrians destroyed the bridges over the San.

"On September 15, in the region of San Domierz and Rabomysl, over 300 prisoners and ten guns were taken.

The Russians captured 3,000 prisoners and twenty-two cannon in the region of Memirov and have taken 3,000 cases of ammunition.

At Namerm and in the immediate neighborhood, a large number of pieces of artillery and a quantity of stores have been captured.

ARMIES GATHER FOR BATTLE NEAR CRACOW

By STEVEN BURNETT,
American Staff Correspondent.

VIENNA, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Sept. 19.—Three Austrian armies are concentrating on the Cracow-Tarnow-Przemysl line for a decisive battle with the Russian armies of General Ruzsky and General Broussiloff, according to an official announcement issued here today.

(This line is 130 miles long, apparently following the railroad connecting the three cities. Tarnow is fifty miles east of Cracow and Przemysl eighty miles from Tarnow. This dispatch indicates that the announcements made in Petrograd of overwhelming Russian victories were greatly exaggerated by the Czar's general staff.)

The official statement says:

Austrian Coat of Arms

The position occupied by the Austrian armies has been heavily fortified. General Boveeridge will command the right wing, with his centre resting at Przemysl, the main centre will be commanded by General Von Auffenburg, with Tarnow as his base and the left wing will be commanded by General Dankel with the Germans supporting his extreme left. His base will be Cracow.

The entire Russian left wing, commanded by General Ruzsky and General Broussiloff, is expected momentarily to begin an attack. The initial attack is expected against Przemysl.

CARLTON TELLS LIFE STORY; TO PROVE IT TRUE

"Sir" James Cables for Documents to Show Noble Descent and Marriage.

"Sir" James Carlton, who landed in Boston on the liner Cleveland two months or so ago and for a time dazzled the city, and who was recently arrested on a charge of violating the white slave law, broke a long silence and told the immigration officials the story of his life yesterday.

He promised to cable to England for papers to prove his story. These papers include, for one thing, records from the College of Heralds showing Sir James claims his descent from the Carlton Baronetcy.

It is expected he will also cable for proof of his marriage, under the Scotch common law, to Miss Annie Laidlaw, who has been known here as "Lady" Carlton, and who was arrested at the same time as Sir James. Sir James says they married "on Whit Monday of this year under the recognized and legal common law of Scotland, as Presbyterians."

"MARRIED IN EDINBORO."

"The ceremony occurred in the Waverly Hotel of the North British Railroad chain in Edinboro, near the birthplace of Lady Carlton. The ceremony was sworn to with clasped hands in the presence of two witnesses, whose names are on record, and the register of the hotel with the names of these witnesses will substantiate my contention."

"Lady" Carlton is just of age, while Sir James is fifty-three. After their arrest, Sir James was held in $1,000 bail. The authorities asserted that he is really Jerome J. Weldon, whom Glasgow investors would like to interview, and that Lady Carlton is his stenographer.

Sir James replied that this charge was the result of an attempt to blackmail him, and threatened to have the blackmailer indicted.

WASHINGTON TO DECIDE.

Until the documents cabled for arrive from England no decision will be made in the case. In fact, the final decision will probably be made in Washington. Sir James may be deported, but it was predicted yesterday that the case would turn in his favor and he would be released.

Yesterday's hearing, secret, was before Inspector Daniel J. Leonard of the United States Immigration service.

Carlton, who was president of the United States Oxygen Corporation, a million dollar concern which he organized and in which he invested some $300,000, has resigned from the company. It is said that stockholders of the Cox Brass Manufacturing Company of Glasgow are anxious to question Sir James.

$100,000,000 GOLD FUND PLAN IS APPROVED

Money to Be Deposited in Ottawa to Relieve the Foreign Exchange.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—The Federal Reserve Board today approved of the plan for a $100,000,000 gold fund to meet the obligations of this country in Europe. The action of the board was explained in a formal statement issued by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo as follows:

"The Federal Reserve Board today received from the committee of bankers, which has been studying the foreign exchange situation, a recommendation that a gold fund of $100,000,000 be created to relieve the present international exchange situation. This amount would be contributed by the banks located in reserve and central reserve cities. The board approved the plan in its general features. The details will be arranged and announced next week.

"The gold fund, it is said, will be contributed to by the national banks in the central reserve cities of New York, Chicago and St. Louis, and the reserve cities. It is not likely that any country banks will be asked to contribute to the fund.

"It is proposed to deposit a certain portion of the gold fund, the exact amount to be determined at a later date, in the Bank of England depository in Ottawa. The deposit of this money, backed up by the creation of the big fund, is expected to partially restore foreign exchange.

Death of Pioneer Banker Richardson

Spencer Wells Richardson, pioneer Boston banker and founder of the banking firm of Richardson, Hill and Company, died suddenly at his home, No. 426 Beacon street. He was born in Princeton, April 30, 1836, and began life as a ticket seller in a railroad office. He was prominent in educational and social work and treasurer of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital.

"BOMBARDMENT OF RHEIMS AN INFERNO OF BURSTING SHELLS"

"I was surprised at the rather small amount of damage a cannon shell causes. I had a close view of one that hit a house just across the square in front of the cathedral, and I happened to be looking at that particular house at the moment it was struck. The shell hit the side of it, just below the eaves. There was a resounding crash, a shower of dust, a cascade of falling tiles and mortar, and then there was nothing to be seen but a hole about three feet across in the wall, out of which a wisp of gray fumes came wavering.

"I had come down to the lower gallery on the outside of the cathedral before this shell arrived, by my side was the old sacristan of the cathedral. I shall never forget the note of horrified indignation in the exclamation that burst from him as that shell smashed a hole in the roof of the tall house so close before our eyes.

"'That's my home,' he shouted, as if for the German gunner three miles away to hear his protest. Then his voice dropped to a key of bitter grief and his face remained unmoved for none of that little group of priests and cathedral officers showed either fear or emotion. They have got used to terror. And the pity of it all, you must remember,' said one of them, 'is that we have had three days of this, and three days seem enough to have accustomed the citizens of Rheims to spend their lives either as troglodytes in cellars or in watching the havoc wrought in their city by a relentless enemy.'

GERMAN AIM POOR.

"What struck me particularly in the two hours I spent on the cathedral, was the remarkably ineffectiveness of the German aim. I could see the French battery, at least, quite clearly. They were in a field just beyond Hollein's Works, without cover of any kind. The guns were in a line at regular intervals, each with its compact little group around it and a line of men stretching afield to a high building, from which the major of the battery presumably was directing the fire, since one saw the men run to and fro with messages.

"Yet all the time I watched, no shell fell near these guns, while many fell beyond in the open fields and in the town behind.

"On the other hand, the French shells, not only from this battery, but from four others, that I could locate, were bursting right on top of the woods where the German guns were concealed.

"The chief damage done by the Germans was to empty buildings. The barracks of the dragoons, for instance, on the edge of the town, a place so big that I took it for a mill, was blazing fiercely, with the roof off, and there were fires at about eight points with firemen at work putting them out. The Church of St. Henry had received two shells and all the west row of windows was blown out.

"I could not get even a guess as to the number of civilians killed by shells bursting in the town. They probably were few though, for practically everyone in the part of the town exposed to fire had been underground for three days."

Trains in Crash; Crossing Man Hurt

NEW LONDON, Ct., Sept. 19.—Harry J. Taylor, crossing tender at the Union Passenger Station was struck and seriously injured by the locomotive of the express train from New York to Boston about 4 o'clock tonight. Cockroaches and Typhoid

It is best always to be on the warning in time, for at this season of the year cockroaches are more numerous and very dangerous. Many people have to contend with these pests, and every effort is used to exterminate them, but all to no avail. Others don't bother about them, for they think it impossible to get rid of them. Others again realize their presence is dangerous, but they are helpless, as they have no idea how to get rid of them. There is no doubt that the cockroach and water bug have a fascinating effect upon nothing unless it is the fact that they are so much like human beings in their habits, that they are so much like human beings in their habits, that they are so much like human beings in their habits,

ELECTRIC COUNTERS FOR NEW SUBWAY

"Last Word" in Traction Work to Be Supplied in the Boylston Tunnel to Be Opened on Oct. 4; to Dispense With "Choppers"

Electrically driven machines for taking and counting nickel car fares on the prepayment plan at both station entrances, have been installed in the new Boylston street subway, the formal opening of which is expected to take place October 4, two weeks from today.

These automatic cash takers and counters will make liars of sellers a drug on the labor market at the new subway stations. In addition to conserving the time of passengers, they also are expected to lower the "L" printing bills. They are the last word in subway equipment, to prevent any one short-changing the company.

Ticket sellers and "choppers" will not be used either at the Massachusetts avenue or at the Copley Square stations of the new subway. Their places will be taken by girls to supply change, and men to guard the power-driven nickel prepayment boxes. After this formality is dispensed with, one may pass through the usual turnstile to the station platforms, when the cars really start running.

GREAT SAFETY DEVICE.

Another absolutely new device installed in the new mile and a half subway is a triple-block system, to prevent any possibility of a collision between cars. This is the only triple-block system in use at any surface-car subway in the country, and the blocks are not more than 150 feet apart in many instances.

By an automatic arrangement even more ingenious than that which takes care of and counts the nickel fares, this triple-block system shows a red danger signal from the moment a car enters any given stretch of track until that track is clear again.

When a yellow light flares forth, it is a warning to all approaching motormen to slow down, as extreme caution is necessary although actual danger is not imminent.

It is only when a green light beckons them on that the motormen who operate cars in the new subway will be free to "give-er-the juice," for the green light appears only when two blocks are clear ahead and speeding can be indulged in safely.

Although no official notice to that effect has been posted to date, it is asserted that semi-convertible cars exclusively will be run through the new subway, which has stone-ballasted tracks thoroughout and cement-coated tracks in the station limits.

These cars in turn are expected to carry about 100,000 passengers a day.

They will run from the Park station loop in the old Tremont street subway underground to Kenmore street, and from that point, on the surface, to the Brookline, the Allston, Newton, Cottage Farm, Watertown and adjoining districts.

FIRE-PROOF CONSTRUCTION.

Only one curve of any size occurs in the long underground stretch of tracks that make the course of the new subway, and that comes at the Massachusetts avenue station. The remainder of the below-surface right-of-way practically is straight-ahead driving.

There is fire-proof construction throughout the entire length of the great underground structure, the only wooden equipment being the ties, the station hand-rails, and the turnstiles. Even the cash counters' offices and the news stands are brass sheathed, concrete and artificial stone being used elsewhere.

That the station platforms are roomy enough to accommodate all passenger requirements for years to come was shown by the dimensions previously published in the AMERICAN, but mere figures alone never could convey the actual impression that a personal inspection of the big tube conveys to one's mind.

Seek Aid for Boston Woman in War Zone

Mrs. Lillian H. Rosecrans of Roxbury has been lost sight of in the German war zone and, at the request of Councilman Watson, Mayor Curley has wired Secretary of State Bryan, urging that she be sought for and provided an immediate passage back to this city. Mrs. Rosecrans was last heard of in Frankfort-on-the-Main, Prussia.

Rush Work on Boston's New Free Market

Curley Issues Orders to Have Site Ready for Business by Friday at the Latest.

Boston's free market for lower food prices rapidly is being put into shape, that it may be ready for opening at Shawmut avenue and Castle street by next Friday morning at the latest.

Several tons of rubbish that littered the 15,000-foot plot, and a number of billboards have been removed, with provision made for a cinder-covered roadway leading onto and extending through the grounds.

Still another group of workmen will be employed in erecting plank stalls tomorrow or Tuesday, from which to sell goods on the rent-free sites to be assigned the different marketmen when the formal opening takes place.

Happy Event Soon at Oakland Farm

Two Doctors Will Be Summoned to Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Home.

NEWPORT, Sept. 19.—A happy event is looked for at Oakland Farm, the Summer Home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, for which Dr. Austin Flint, Jr., and Dr. Charles D. Easton are to be called. The Vanderbilts recently came to Newport from Westgate-on-the-Sea in England. There is already baby Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Jr., born at Betchworth, Surrey, England, in September, 1912.

Young Mrs. Vanderbilt was formerly Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim. She is a daughter of Captain and Mrs. Isaac E. Emerson of Baltimore, both of whom were divorced some time ago. Mutual friends say Mrs. Vanderbilt has been about the happiest married woman in the country since she took the name of Vanderbilt.

Denies Hearing to Nahant Club

Judge Hammond of the Supreme Court ruled yesterday that the Nahant Selectmen were not obliged to grant a hearing before revoking the liquor license of the Shore Club of that town. The case now goes to the full bench on appeal.

Judge Hammond dismissed the club's petition that the Selectmen be compelled to certify the records of their action. The Shore Club received a license May 1 for $500. On August 12 President James L. Cowles of the club, for some reason not brought out, took the license from the clubhouse to the Selectmen. September 2 the club asked for it. The Selectmen refused, and on September 5 revoked the license. The club said this was without legal right, as no complaint had been made. The Selectmen declare, however, that the club was injurious to the welfare, good order and morality of the town.

Policeman Scored for Clubbing Man

"When a man is appointed to the force and given his club," remarked Judge Fallon today in the South Boston court, "the club is for his own protection and not for knocking men down on the slightest provocation." Patrolman Michael Lynch had brought in William Carroll and charged Carroll assaulted him. Carroll said: "I came home last Thursday evening and saw my stepdaughter on the steps with a boy named Nickerson. I ordered her into the house. Nickerson remonstrated, and we came to blows. Patrolman Lynch came along. I tried to explain, and he struck me several times on the head with his club. Judge Fallon ordered Caroll's discharge.

Plan Monument in Honor of Sullivan

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—While thousands of school boys stood with bowed heads as the funeral cortege passed, the body of James E. Sullivan, world leader in amateur sport, was taken from his home today to St. Aloysius Church where funeral services were held. Burial was in Calvary Cemetery.

At a meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union of which Sullivan was secretary, steps were taken last night to erect a monument to the athlete's friend.

MRS. GREEN TO CANCEL SUIT FOR DIVORCE?

Society Folk Now Confident Misunderstanding of "Jimmy" Garland's Widow and Second Husband Has Been Cleared Up

Mrs. Marie Tudor Garland Green may not feel compelled to divorce her second husband in order to realize that she really loves him after all.

Mrs. Green divorced "Jimmy" Garland, her first husband, then relieved and re-married him. After he died she married Francis Cushing Green, and now has a second divorce action pending. But there is a possibility—nay, even a prospect, their friends say—that the engaging plaintiff will become reunited with her second husband without the bother of divorcing him.

The rumors of reunion are not without cause.

First—and most interesting cause—Boston society hears that the divorce proceeding begun by Mrs. Green resulted from one of the strangest misapprehensions on record. Gossip has it that, while Mrs. Green was sincerely convinced of the accuracy of her divorce charges, satisfactory explanations can be made.

Another cause for the reunion report in the fact that Mr. Green, who is now in New York, is heart-broken over the divorce suit because he still loves his wonderful wife and has strong affection for her five children.

MRS. GREEN IN ENGLAND.

Third cause—The divorce action is on the Barnstable court docket for next month, but Joseph Lund, counsel for Mr. Green, said this week: "I hardly think that it will come up in October." Also, Robert Morse, Mrs. Green's lawyer, has just been over in New York where Mr. Green is. Mrs. Green's lawyer may have seen Mrs. Green's husband in New York, and then again he may not.

Anyhow, society recalls the most interesting marriage, divorce and remarriage of Mrs. Green and her first husband, and wonders if Mrs. Green, having married a second husband and having begun divorce action, may change her mind before divorce this time.

Mrs. Green is now in England, whose war-tossed condition may strike a responsive note in her own troubled mind. She is at Mudeford, Christ's Church, Berks. With her are her mother, Mrs. Frederic Tudor, her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Tudor, of Needham, and her sister, Mrs. Euphemia Slade, of Boston and Quebec, with three daughters.

With the family party also is James A. Garland, Mrs. Green's uncle, who would be taking up his second year at Harvard if he were home. But his mother thinks that the European war lessons, at close range, will be of greater benefit than the immediate college lessons.

DESCENDED FROM ROYALTY.

Mrs. Slade—who was "Effie" Tudor—was in Switzerland for her health with her daughters when the war struck. It was only by diplomatic aid, secured by Mrs. Green, that Mrs. Slade and the girls escaped to England without any serious misadventures.

Mrs. Green and Mrs. Slade are half of the four interesting Tudor girls. Not the least interesting point in their histories is their attribute of royal descent—right from the English Tudor line. Their great-great-great-great-grandmother resigned the title to the Swedish crown to wed a German University professor, a Baron. Another relative, a grand aunt of the four Boston girls, became the bride of a Portuguese King who surrendered his crown for her.

Marie Tudor, one of the most fascinating maids Boston ever gave to society, was brilliantly wedded in 1893, when she was twenty-three years old, to James A. Garland, who was blessed with $100,000 a year and the popularity that made him "Jimmy" to everyone.

Three sons and a daughter were born to them. In 1903 Mrs. Garland divorced "Jimmy," his cross-libel being dismissed. Before society ceased regretting this wreck of the Garland home the divorced couple met on "Jimmy's" yacht, the Barracouta, at Hyannisport, fell in love over again, hurried to Bristol, R. I., and were married all over again.

LOVE BEFORE MONEY.

A fifth child was born to them and

Fiction Outdone in Canton Girl's Romance

Melody from Shy Little Country Girl's Violin Melts Heart of Wealthy Engineer

Wedding Follows Courtship of Two Weeks

Real O. Henry Adventure in New York, With Robert W. Chambers' Finish.

This is about a little Boston girl violinist, a Canton girl, to be exact, who went to New York to seek her fortune.

O. Henry wrote lots of pathetic tales about little girls who go to New York to seek their fortunes, but this is truth which is stranger than fiction, and there is nothing pathetic about it.

The girl is Ellen Keller, who has appeared in concert in Boston, notably at the Tremont Temple Concert Course. She is a pupil of Willy Hess in Berlin and an accomplished musician.

Miss Keller after a season in Boston went to New York early last summer to arrange concert dates for the coming season. She is a very pretty girl of a dashing type, the sort calculated to make a deep impression wherever she goes.

Within three weeks after she left Canton her family and friends were astounded to receive notices of her marriage to Charles Sooy Smith, the eminent engineer, son of General William Sooy Smith, one of the most famous Civil War veterans and most distinguished engineers in the country.

Mr. Sooy Smith, the husband, is in middle life and his bride is under twenty-five, but they participated in a romance like one of Robert W. Chambers'.

Mr. Sooy Smith is a clubman, a society man and a musical enthusiast. When one of his friends invited him to a Fifth avenue salon where a new girl violinist was to play he accepted with pleasure and he first caught sight of his future wife as she swayed over her bow and performed exquisitely a melody by Tschaikowsky. He sought an introduction. The courtship was rapid. In less than a fortnight they were married and went to live in the stylish Peter Stuyvesant apartment house on Riverside Drive. The mayor of New York is the occupant of the apartment beneath them and many national celebrities and financiers live in the hotel.

Mr. Sooy Smith is in hearty sympathy with his young wife's desire for a career and is assisting in every way to further her ambitions.

Mrs. Charles Sooy Smith formerly Miss Ellen Keller of Canton, now bride after romantic courtship.

President Lowell's Sister Gives New Poem to American

Verses to Be Published in Early Fall Show Her Versatility.

Miss Amy Lowell, sister of President Lowell of Harvard University, will publish in the early Fall another volume of poetry. Among the verses is the following entitled "The Coal Picker," which Miss Lowell has permitted the Sunday AMERICAN to print. It shows Miss Lowell's versatility:

THE COAL PICKER.

He perches in the slime, inert,
Bedashed with iridescent dirt.
The oil upon the puddles dries
To colors like a peacock's eyes,
And half-submerged tomato cans
Shine scaly, as leviathans
Goally crawling through the mud.
The ground is here and there beaud
With lumps of only part-burned coal.
His duty is to glean the whole.
To pick them from the filth, each one,
To hoard them for the hidden sun
Which glows within each fiery core
And waits to be made free once more.
Their sharp and glistening edges cut
His stiffened fingers. Through the smut
Gleam red the wounds which will not shut.
Wet through and shivering, he kneels
And digs the slippery coals—like eels
They slide about. His force all spent
He counts his small accomplishment.
A half-a-dozen clinker-coals
Which still have fire in their souls.
Fire! And in his thought there burns
The topaz fire of votive urns.
He sees it fling from hill to hill,
And still consumed, is burning still.
Higher and higher leaps the flame,
The smoke an everwhiting frame.
He sees a Spanish Castle old,
With silver steps and paths of gold.
From myrtle-bowers comes the plash
Of fountains, and the emerald flash
Of parrots in the orange trees,
Whose blossoms pasture humming bees.
He knows he feeds the urns whose smoke
Bears visions, that his master stroke
Is out of dirt and misery
To light the fire of poesy.
He sees the glory, yet he knows
That others cannot see his shows.
To them his smoke is sightless, black,
His votive vessels but a pack
Of old discarded shards, his fire
A peddler's; still to him the pyre
Is incensed, as enduring gold
He sighs and grubs another coal.

They were held in $300 each. John Campbell and John Meagher are under arrest in Boston charged with stealing produce from a wagon belonging to Albert J. Hall of No. 21 John street.

Lawyer Moroney Is Held in $2,500 Bail

Well Known Attorney Charged with Larceny of $1,500.

John A. E. Moroney, a well-known Boston lawyer, was arraigned yesterday before Judge Sullivan in the Municipal Court charged with the larceny of $1,500 from Walter J. Sugden on August 28. Moroney pleaded not guilty and the case was continued for a hearing on September 29. He was represented by Attorney Clarence W. Rowley.

Bail was fixed at $2,500. Moroney furnished surety when arrested and the same bonds gave him his liberty yesterday. The amount of bail was fixed after arrest by Assistant District Attorney Daniel V. McIsaac.

Mr. Moroney is well known in legal and political circles. He was counsel for James Mantir, who, with Peter Delorey was convicted of the murder of Annie Mullins in Arlington several years ago. Mantir, whom Moroney represented, is serving a life term.

Rehearing on Rate Advance on Oct. 19

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today granted the petition of the eastern railroads for a rehearing of the 5 per cent. advance rate case and set October 19 as the date for the rehearing.

The commission ruled that the hearing be limited "to presentation of facts disclosed and occurrences originating subsequently to the date upon which the records previously made in these cases were disclosed."

This provision practically limits the new hearing of the case to conditions brought about by the European war.

Pending the rehearing the provisions of the decision handed down in this case recently are to remain in effect.

G. O. P. MACHINE OUT WITH A SLATE; BIG SPLIT THREATENS

Herman Hormel of the State Committee Admits Having Sent Out Thousands of Marked Tickets; Cushing, Brier, Pierce, Curtin and Monette Selected; Rejected Candidates Are Sore.

Orders have gone out from the rooms of the Republican State Committee in the Kimball building that THIS is the ticket which MUST be nominated at Tuesday's primaries:

For Lieutenant-Governor, Grafton D. Cushing.
For Secretary of State, Frank L. Brier.
For State Treasurer, Frederick W. Pierce.
For Attorney-General, John A. Curtin.
For Auditor, Joseph Monette.

This "slate" has been mailed to thousands of Republicans by Herman A. Hormel of South Boston, a member of the Republican State Committee and president of the Republican City Committee.

Progressive Republicans are indignant at the discovery, which comes at a time when liberal Republicans had almost been convinced that the old order of things Republican had passed away.

For every Republican nomination on the list there were at least two contestants. For some of them there were more, John A. Curtin having four well-known rivals for the Attorney-General nomination.

When the State Committee recommends Cushing it discriminates against Colonel August H. Goetting of Springfield and former State Treasurer Elmer A. Stevens.

For the Lodge-Crane machine to favor Frank L. Brier for Secretary of State, is to give Mr. Brier a most unfair advantage over William S. Kinney of Boston and Albert P. Langtry of Springfield, a man with previous experience in the office.

And so down the list. Pierce is favored by the machine for Treasurer at the expense of Charles L. Burrill of Boston.

It had been assumed that the State Committee would rest content with the frantic order of Chairman Edward A. Thurston that Joseph Monette must be nominated for auditor and Alonzo B. Cook buried.

The sending out of the "official" ticket has created a sensation. In the opinion of many Republicans it has already not only made Republican success impossible this year but probably means a further material falling off in the vote. Many good Republicans are disheartened. They say that the Kimball building program, if it is nothing more, is a vicious blow at the direct primary system and will be so regarded by the masses of Bay State voters.

Approximately 600,000 Massachusetts men are entitled to go to the polling places on Tuesday to pick the November candidates of the political parties. Some of them will do so.

Subscribing to the good old axiom that one good term deserves another, the Democrats enter the November contest with the ticket which brought them success in 1913.

Whether 2,000 or 200,000 Democrats are careful to mark the State ticket in Tuesday's primaries, the Democratic candidates again will be Governor Walsh, Lieutenant-Governor Barry, Secretary of State Donahue, State Treasurer Mansfield, State Auditor Pope and Attorney-General Thomas J. Boynton.

Joseph Walker of Brookline will be nominated for Governor by the Progressives, but all that is now certain on the Republican end is that Samuel W. McCall of Winchester will head the ticket.

The Republican machine never before thought seriously and ultimately of "doing something for the French," but this year they want the French-American vote to help them defeat Governor Walsh. To this end they think they need a "French name on the State ticket," and Joseph Monette is the man.

Alonzo B. Cook, a young Boston attorney, has brought down upon his head the wrath of every Republican machinist in Eastern Massachusetts by venturing to enter his name against that of Monette.

In this exigency Chairman Edward A. Thurston of the Republican State Committee has taken the bold and unprecedented step of writing to every Republican city and town committee in the State that Cook must be rejected and Monette nominated. These are the orders.

In his letter to local committees, Mr. Thurston speaks of the "necessity" of nominating Monette. "He is known," says the Thurston letter, "as the first president of the Franco-American Republican Club of Massachusetts."

Friends of A. B. Cook said last night that the Thurston letter will live to plague the new State chairman. They wanted to know how it is going to strike thousands of German-American Republicans who have been voting the Republican ticket without a break ever since Civil War days.

Fourteen Norfolk County organization Republicans have joined in the State Committee attack on Cook in the interest of Monette. Among the signers of the Norfolk appeal are Charles H. Pearson of Brookline and Eugene C. Hultman of Quincy, two of the most reactionary "standpatters" ever sent to the State Senate, and George L. Barnes of Weymouth, State House attorney for the New Haven Railroad.

LIVELY FIGHTS FOR CONGRESS ON TUESDAY

Boston has a distinct and lively interest in five Congressional seats, three of which are entirely within the city, and in two of them lively battles are on for the Democratic nominations in Tuesday's primaries.

Ward 26 (Hyde Park) is in the Fourteenth Congressional District. Here Richard Olney, 2d, will take the Democratic nomination without a contest. Ward 25 (Brighton-Allston) is in Congressman Mitchell's Thirteenth District. Mr. Mitchell will be renominated and re-elected, but an underground battle has been instituted against him, in a district where the Republicans control all the wealth, and the Congressman's friends are strongly urged to go to the polls on Tuesday to place a mighty and unmistakable stamp of popular approval on the Washington record of one of the best men New England has sent to Washington in years.

The "Eva Tanguay" of the Congressional field in Massachusetts is Congressman James A. Gallivan of the South Boston-Dorchester District. Congressman James is to have a renomination without a contest. The district is overwhelmingly Democratic, so James should worry.

BITTER FIGHT IN TENTH.

Most spectacular of all the Boston engagements has been the campaign of Representative Peter F. Tague of

LIVELY FIGHTS FOR CONGRESS ARE ON TUESDAY

Tague Should Win in Spectacular Struggle With Keliher in the Tenth District.

Charlestown to keep the Tenth District unmistakably and unquestionably DEMOCRATIC. Tague's opponent is former Congressman John A. Keliher, who was sent to the bench four year ago after he had lined up with twenty-two other alleged Democrats in a vote to retain the Speaker Cannon rules by which the House at Washington had long been managed for the "interests" and against the people.

Tague is the Democratic leader of the House on Beacon Hill. He has served in the Legislature six years, two of them in the Senate. He has been on the line in everybody else's battles for twenty years, but of course has had to fight his primary fight alone. He has come along like the Boston Braves and, like the Braves, is today the favorite in the betting.

Keliher is a battler, however, and the fight will not be over until it is ended. The former congressman has struck one vicious blow below the belt. Because Peter Tague is a lifelong total abstainer Keliher has advised liquor dealers and bartenders to vote against Tague on the Keliher allegation that Tague is a rabid anti-Saloon Leaguer. Mr. Tague's votes at the State House for six years are a sufficient refutation of the charge, and Keliher is convicted of striking a foul blow. The Republicheiery Gonarde have lately shown a decided interest in defeating Tague. Big things may happen here at the eleventh hour. Tague should be nominated.

MORGAN AND WATSON GRAPPLE.

Out in the Eleventh District (Roxbury-Jamaica Plain), Senator Frank Horgan and City Councillor James A. Watson have dropped their muskets and are engaged in a struggle hand to hand. The Pay candidacy appears to have blown up. John McDonald, who managed the Pow campaigns, a Fitzgerald campaign and the Curley campaign, has been taking care of Horgan. McDonald generally wears a blue funk at this stage of his campaigns and looks for disaster. He was smiling last night and sure that Horgan will win. Watson is as confident of Watson's success, and thinks McDonald's is a case for the doctors.

It may be just as well to point out now that the Democratic winner in the Eleventh must not take the time from Tuesday to election day for his annual vacation. The Republican nominee will be George Holden Tinkham.

Out in the Third Congress District, Fred O'Connell of Fitchburg wants a third try at the Democratic nomination. Owen A. Hobas is the contestant. The Progressives have made no nomination. The Republicans have renominated Calvin D. Page.

Captain Augustus Gardner, who wouldn't be hanged if somebody wasn't trying to trip him up, faces a situation in the Sixth District where A. Platt Andrew wants both the Progressive and the Republican nominations. George Scofield of Ipswich is willing to run again for the Democrats and, if the A. Platt Andrew campaign makes much more trouble for Captain Gardner, may break through in November.

Another big driver in the Cambridge District a fierce battle is on between Fred Dallinger and Charley Baxter for the Republican nomination. This contest is engendering bad blood. Fred Dalitrick, Democratic Congressman and a good one, should romp back to Washington.

THE CAPE COD DISTRICT.

The Republican candidates are particularly anxious to win the nomination in the Sixteenth District because they believe that a nomination means an election. This belief is founded upon the bad record of pledge-breaker Thomas C. Thacher, Democratic congressman who voted to surrender American control of the Panama Canal to a foreign power, for a little Federal patronage. By this vote Mr. Thacher violated his party honor, which was pledged by the party platform to free tolls for American ships. But the transcontinental railroads wanted to keep up freight and passenger rates by water, so they made a lot of recreant Democrats like Mr. Thacher vote to repudiate their own party platform and reverse the action of their own Democratic Congress the year before, which passed the free toll bill.

For this and other reasons Mr. Thacher is regarded as certain to be defeated, a fact which adds zest to the Republican primary fight.

In Congressional districts not named the nominations will be uncontested or practically so.

SENATE FIGHTS GROW CLOSER NEARING POLLS

Candidates on Last Lap of Primary Campaign Make Strong Showing in All Districts.

And there are also Senate contests on, dozens of them, to be decided like the rest on Tuesday.

The average citizen pays too little attention to these events. He is naturally attracted by and interested in the major contests, for places on the State ticket and nominations for Congress.

In each of two Boston districts, nevertheless, the Democratic nomination for the Senate has six contestants.

These fiercer fights are going on in the Seventh (Roxbury), now represented by Senator James F. Timilty, "Boss of Ward 18," and the Sixth (South Boston), lately represented by Senator William F. Hickey. Mr. Hickey has retired. Timilty wants to come back and is fighting for his political life.

FIGHTS ARE CLOSE.

Timilty's rivals include two young men with splendid records in the House of Representatives, namely, P. Joseph McManus and James J. Griffin, Dr. James F. Hanley, who came within sixty votes of laying Timilty out a year ago, W. J. Miller and Representative "Jim" McInerney.

The South Boston free-for-all includes Michael J. Reidy, one of the best speakers the Democrats have had in late years at the State House; William J. Sullivan, Daniel J. Chapman, John J. Murphy, John J. Lydon and Thomas H. Bradley. All but one of these men have served recently in the House of Representatives.

The North End-West End District witnesses a struggle between Senator Philip McDonagle and John H. Farley, a West End favorite. Farley ran last year as a Progressive and, with red fire and brass bands, and even the Lomasneys scared. This year Farley will have the Progressive nomination without a struggle and is modestly asking for the Democratic colors also.

HOAR AND LAWLER.

"Jimmy" Green, who will continue to run until they give it to him, is again an aspirant for the Democratic Senate nomination in the Charlestown-East Boston district. His rivals are John J. Douglass of East Boston and Michael Francis McGrath of Charlestown. McGrath came out of the recent session of the Legislature with a perfect record as a Democratic Representative. Any of the three should make a good Senator.

As far down town as the Old South Building one can hear the Bernheimer Democratic fight of John J. Hoar against Charles S. Lawler. The danger here may be that the contest has grown so acute that it will continue to the polls.

Fitz Reopens Store Under His Own Name

Former Mayor Fitzgerald has reopened his clothing store on Adams Square as the John F. Fitzgerald Clothing Company. It was formerly the Oak Hall Company. The Mayor bought it, took charge, closed out the old stock at a big sacrifice, then shut the doors and proceeded to alter the store and lay in a new stock in preparation for the present opening. Mr. Fitzgerald is in personal charge at the store daily.

Roosevelt Scores New Haven; Sounds Moose Tocsin in Kansas

By BERT E. LENNON.
Staff Correspondent of the American.

WICHITA, Kan., Sept. 19.—Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt sounded a keynote of the Progressive Fall campaign here today by advocating a program that shall consider the interests of business and labor without divorcing them; creation of governmental agencies to deal with modern commerce and manufacture; social legislation and reform of the political machinery, particularly that relating to presidential nominations.

He scored the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad for the conditions revealed by recent investigations, saying:

"When employers show themselves as callous to the public need, as short-sighted and as greedy of their own profit as to be indifferent to the welfare of the wage-workers or of the people at large, as has been the case in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company and the New Haven road, it is essential that the people of the country shall be able to exercise their prerogatives."

MANY NEAR POVERTY.

Most of the ex-President's address was devoted to the relations of capital and labor. He said in part on this subject:

"We must realize the absolute need that the laborer shall have his share in the prosperity of the manufacturer. There is in this country at the present time a great population living close enough to want so that illness, unemployment or a death in the family may involve not merely hardship or grief, but a veritable calamity for all its members. As late as a quarter of a century ago, only a fourth of the people engaged in gainful occupation were employes, whereas now nearly half of these people work for salary or wages. Aside from the great body of men who work for wages there are now some 2,000,000 children and at least 8,000,000 women who are wage-workers.

"We are striving to work for the greatest industrial success and, therefore, to put a premium upon the honest activity of honest business men, as well as moral obligations, must accompany such power.

"I believe that every wise employer or corporation should recognize the union, should recognize the right of the men who work for wages to bargain collectively, whenever and as far as they desire, and in the form which they desire. I believe no less emphatically in the right of the non-union man to work side by side with the union man, exactly as the non-strike committee advocated in its report, which was signed by the most prominent members of labor.

"I will no more stand for tyranny by a labor union than tyranny against a labor union. But a so-called open shop, in which there is discrimination against union men, is one of the most vicious types of a closed shop."

The convention will be held in June, 1916, and will convene in the Hippodrome. Delegates to this event will represent 1,250,000 women.

Why Cadum Is Good for Skin Diseases

The important thing in treating many skin diseases is to keep water away from the inflamed parts and make the covering as air tight as possible. This, according to a very distinguished New York physician, seems to kill the germs and set up the healing process quickly. Cadum, the well-known skin remedy, supplies that kind of a covering and keeps out the air. This covering consists of petrolatum and white wax, which Cadum contains. Two other ingredients of Cadum are zinc oxide, which dries up the water that comes from the sores, and oil of cade, which is one of the oldest and best known remedies for eczema. Physicians everywhere employ oil of cade more often, perhaps, than any other one thing in treating eczema. Cadum costs 10c for a trial box, while the 25c box contains nearly four times as much as the 10c size.

PETER F. TAGUE RETAINS ATHLETIC VIGOR OF YOUTH

Democrat Likely to Succeed Congressman Murray—Was Crack Ball Player.

One of the incidents of the primary campaign, which comes to an end on Tuesday, was the discovery that among the Democratic running for Congress in this jurisdiction is a man who—while he believes in the licensed saloon and has always voted that way—has never tasted liquor.

Peter F. Tague of Charlestown, the Democrat in question, is an athlete and a business man. In his youth he was a bit of an amateur boxer. He rowed with the Curry Boat Club. He was a crackerjack backstop with the Winthrop baseball club of Charlestown and the Marions of Brookline.

And he looks the part today. At forty-three Peter Tague has the appearance of a man of thirty-five. Five feet ten inches tall, he weighs 196 pounds. None of it is "fat."

Inasmuch as it seems likely that Mr. Tague is to be Postmaster Murray's successor in Congress, there is a growing public interest in the man and his antecedents.

One of the eleven children born to Peter and Mary A. Tague, the Democratic leader of the House of Representatives has always lived in the Charlestown district. He was graduated from the Frothingham Grammar School there, and he entered but did not graduate from English High.

Tague senior was a cooper in the employ of the Metropolitan Steamship Company, then one of the many interests of Henry M. Whitney, and at the age of fifteen Peter, Jr., left the High School to become an office boy for the same company.

Soon afterwards Young Master Tague was transferred to another Whitney enterprise, the Neversiip Horseshoe. Here he stayed for eleven years. It certainly is greatly to the credit of a youngster who had to make his own way in the world that, before he left the horseshoe company, he was its general manager.

After eleven years of this connection Mr. Tague entered the iron business in Oliver street on his own account. In later years he has been a manufacturing chemist.

Elected to the City Government in 1894, he was re-elected in '95 and '96, then went to the House of Representatives for two years, and in '99 and 1900 was a State Senator.

Having thus had all that the district was in the habit of giving its favorite sons, Senator Tague stepped aside, only to be called back in a dozen years to serve once more in the House of Representatives. Last year and in the recent session he was the Democratic floor leader. In legislative affairs he has been the right hand of Governor Walsh.

In January, 1905, Mr. Tague led to the altar Miss Josephine T. Fitzgerald, one of Charlestown's loveliest daughters. They have two sons, Philip, twelve, and Peter, Jr., nine years old. Philip was an honor pupil last year at Boston Latin School. The Tagues reside at No. 21 Monument square.

Mr. Tague is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of Columbus, the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, the Catholic Literary Union, the Hayes Squares and the Jackson Club.

Tague talks so well that nine men out of ten who hear him at the State House or on the stump take it for granted that he is an attorney. He probably acquired this readiness by constant practice in the debating societies which once flourished in Charlestown, though, being a bright fellow, he must have acquired some knowledge of the law in six years in the Legislature.

SAY MRS. GREEN WILL DROP SUIT

then "Jimmy" died, in 1906, leaving his widow and children incomes aggregating $240,000 annually. Mrs. Garland received the major part of the income for herself, but there was a clause in the will stipulating that, if she married again, nearly all of her share of the income should be added to that of the children.

Six years later Mrs. Garland married again, income or no income. She married Francis Cushing Green, son of the late Commander Francis Green, U. S. N., graduate of Yale, clubman and manager of Mrs. Garland's summer estate at Bourne.

There was more interest than ever in Mrs. Mark Tudor Garland Green, especially as she stood a fair chance of losing a lot of money by her second marriage. She said with smiles and blush that money did not count with love. Mrs. Green had an income of her own, of course, but the marriage meant, her friends believed, that she would lose the large addition to her resources that her husband's property brought her.

MOBLIZATION goes on at Ostend.

From the many bathing pictures taken at Ostend which we have seen it seems as though Ostend were a terribly exposed locality.

Factories are closed in Vienna and every one is idle.

A sort of Vienna loaf.

"There were mysterious abrasions about the dead man's neck," was a statement in a news item about the finding of a body on the beach.

Probably the unfortunate patronized the same laundry we do.

It is said there are 80,000 hairs in a normal head.

Where did the scientists get the normal head?

Comes now a story from Princeton, Ind., that some beer out there has been kept for twenty years.

Princeton, Ind., we take it, has not been inhabited for a score of years.

Quite a stir was made the other day because a woman aged one hundred and three enjoyed her dinner.

As a matter of fact, a great many of us are quite fond of food as long as we live.

An American artist was arrested in Paris and kept in jail several days. He was painting when arrested.

Of course crime must be punished.

A four weeks' old baby has been taken up in an aeroplane 1,000 feet and christened "Aerial."

She'll be some high-flyer perhaps, when she grows up.

Certain countries are going to bar Wagnerian music.

Why not? War of itself is horrible enough.

A Terre Haute man built an $8,000 mausoleum and has had a telephone installed in it.

After his death his death friends should have no trouble connecting with him as there will be only two exchanges, "H" or "H."

A $20-pound Chicago wife was boasting that she had whipped her 125-pound husband.

Some women have a queer idea of what to boast about.

Montreal wants our gold government notes.

Montreal has got nothing on us.

Now and then you see one of those utterly impossible, absolutely unbelievable stories in the newspapers. Just the other day there was one of this sort. It was headed:

"Women March in SILENT Protest!"

F. A. Thompson, an aviator, while demonstrating bomb dropping at Oakwood Heights aviation field, fell 2,800 feet and sustained a fractured leg.

Lucky for Mr. Thompson that he didn't fall a long distance.

"The Central Street Church was burned down last Thursday. Four years ago the same church burned up."—Titusville, Ore., news item.

All that remains for it now is to burn sideways. By the time this church has burned up and down several more times it will be in need of repairs.

Raisuli, the brigand, is dead.

But we still have in our midst the gentlemen who boost the price of sugar, meat, coal, flour, shoes, etc., etc., etc.

A Nebraska woman secured a divorce because her husband kept a parrot. She ordered the parrot out and her husband went with it.

"As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be;" but the sad part is that she has such continued success.

A claim was recently made that a baby, left an heiress, must have $666 a day to live on.

If we had to have $666 a day in order to live, we would pass on before sunrise of the first day.

A West Virginia octogenarian claims he had a "spirit wife" and that she was no good.

Well, there's good and bad points. It doesn't cost anything to dress her.

But, gee whiz! she would be able to follow you everywhere and watch you!

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" Has Just Reached Broadway

And Never Before Has the Great White Way Been Alluded to as the Last Place on Earth.

By WILLARD CONNELY.

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

IF it takes sixty years before "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is produced on Broadway, how long will it take "East Lynne" to get to the Metropolitan Opera House? Ah, that's it. That is one of the great unsolved problems that is undermining the very foundations of the theatrical world today.

It may take until the supply of ice in Iceland gives out.

Isn't it appalling to think that until last week "Uncle Tom's Cabin" had played, everywhere in the world except on Broadway? Imagine calling Broadway the jumping off place! But it's true, and now the dear old show is ready to go away and die.

This 1914 model of Uncle Thomas' residence is really rather appetizing, and it seems to us that, after all, it was pooty soft fo' dem cullud gemmen down Souf befo' de wah. We are certain that Mrs. Stowe made a great mistake in not submitting proofs of her story to Uncle Tom before publication, for we know he would have changed the titles of some her chapters.

Eliza Was Really Chased by Water Spaniels, Who Know No Pity.

And it is to be regretted that Abe Lincoln himself couldn't have seen this 1914 version of the show before he signed the "black paper." He'd have seen how much more important it was to have repaired the roads through the South, and to scatter a few packages of free seeds amongst the "wealthy planters" who were always broke.

There were a great many things about the play that proved Mrs. Stowe all wrong in that book of hers. Now we had always imagined Uncle Tom a nigger so ancient and venerable that he had forgotten when he was a hundred years old—so old indeed that he only had a fringe of cotton-colored hair running around just above his noble ears. But Uncle Tom in the show looked about like Jack Johnson. He didn't care any more for whip lashes than eyelashes. He could take a lot of punishment, like Jack. He should be annoyed.

Then there's Eliza, who holds the world's record for the hop, skip and jump on ice. They didn't set the bloodhounds after her at all, because bloodhounds won't go near the water. If there's anybody who knows that blood is thicker than water, it's the sanguine hound of that sect. Eliza was really chased by savage water spaniels, who know no pity.

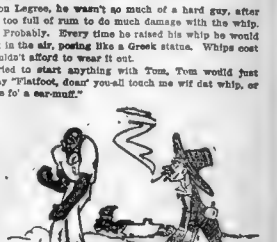
Marks wasn't a bad sort, either. Mrs. Stowe made him out a bit of a villain, but in truth he was the clown of the county. He could ride a mule better than the rube in the circus. A girl in the audience whispered that Marks looked like a character in Dickens' works. We admit he looked like the dickens, but outside of that he resembled more a character in some from works.

Topsy's hair was braided in a series of pigtails that leaned toward the front just like those spikes on the crown of the Statue of Liberty. We always thought her a petty grafter, according to the book, but at the rate at which she pinched things around that plantayah she could have walked away with a horse and a couple of pigs inside her dress.

Little Eva was pretty keen about Uncle Jack Johnson Tom, and she sat in the hammock with him under the stall that he was elucidating the Bible to her. Tom, being a graduate of Tuskogee Institute, could read the Bible upside down.

And as for Simon Legree, he wasn't so much of a hard guy, after all. He was always too full of rum to do much damage with the whip. Or was it cold tea? Probably. Every time he raised his whip he would just stop and hold it in the air, posing like a Greek statue. Whips cost money, and Sime couldn't afford to wear it out.

Whenever he tried to start anything with Tom, Tom would just growl a little and say "Flatfoot, doan' you-all touch me wif dat whip, or you'll wear mah shoe fo' a ear-muff."



"Flatfoot, doan' you-all touch me wif dat whip, or you'll wear mah shoe fo' a ear-muff."

The slave's life was a merry one befo' de wah. He had the happiest married life of anybody. Just when he'd get tired of his wife, he'd be sold, go to another plantation, and get a new one. He was the black Mormon of the United States, except that he didn't keep his wives all in the same harem.

After the war this country lost the best banjo players it ever had. The leader of any symphony orchestra will admit that. And to think that our dear old coon songs must now be played by wops! The wops can't seem to get the hang of "Dixie," somehow. They aren't happy unless they're playing a song full of words like "yah-yah!y-yah-yah."

So this latest version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" simply showed us that darkeys did work, once upon a time, and were glad to do it. Nowadays they give a prize down South to any man who finds a busy darkey. So what's the answer?

NO WONDER IT STOPPED.

BETTY was milking the cow when the mad bull tore over the meadow. Betty did not stir, but continued milking. Observers who had run into safety saw to their astonishment that the bull stopped dead within a few yards of the maid and cow, turned round, and went away sadly.

"Weren't you afraid? Why did he run away?" asked everyone of Betty.

"He got scared" said Betty. "This cow is his mother-in-law."

On the third day of his Aunt Jane's visit to the city, Jones took her for a ride in his high-powered machine. They had proceeded only a few blocks when—

"Jones, you duck," exclaimed Jones' aunt. "What's wrong?" said Jones.

"Everything missing," was the terse reply.

"Dear me," said Aunt Jane. "I do hope it can be found by an honest person. Where do you suppose we dropped it?"

[illegible] was an art student, used to copy celebrated paintings at the Louvre. He and him there one day hard at work on a copy of [illegible] "Mona Lisa."

"You've done a fine thing there," I remarked, for the copy was a good one.

"Yes," Whistler agreed, "I am pleased with it," and then, in his own way, he added, "I wonder what they'll do with the poor original now?"

HOW HE FIGURED IT.

PAT, getting up hurriedly one night and feeling around cautiously in the dark, with his two arms extended, came to an open door, and his arms went on each side of the door, with the result that Pat bumped his nose on the edge of it.

"Begorra," he exclaimed, "this is the first time I iver knew me nose was longer than me arrms."

WHERE IT HURT HIM.

Two negro men were employed in tearing down a three-story bridge building. One negro was on top of the building taking off the bricks and sliding them down a narrow wooden chute to the ground, some thirty feet below, where the other was picking them up and piling them. When this latter negro was stooping over to pick up a brick the former accidentally let one fall, striking him directly on the head instead of its killing him, he merely looked up, without rising, and said:

"What you doin' that, nigger? You made me bite my tongue."

IT ALL DEPENDS.

When James A. Garfield was president of Hiram College a man applied for entrance as a student his son, for whom he wished a shorter course than the regular one.

"I can never take all that in," said the father. "He wants to get through quicker. Can you arrange it for him?"

"O [illegible]," said Mr. Garfield. "He can take a short course if all depends on how you want to make of him. When God want to make an oak it takes a hundred years, but He takes only two months to make a squash."

NOT COMPLIMENTARY.

SIR GEORGE ELD, the former Premier of New Zealand, is a very big man. On one occasion he delivered a long speech. In addition to being very long it was very dull. He spoke of his declining year and said pathetically:

"In a short time I shall have passed away, and will be no more."

Then the fat will be in the fire," yelled a voice from the gallery, and the big orator himself laughed heartily at the humor of it sally.

ANOTHER WAY TO GET EVEN.

"I WANT to sue Doctor Blank for heavy damages!" said the angry client, entering the lawyer's office.

"What has he done?" asked the attorney.

"When he operated on me he left a pair of surgical scissors in me. How much can I sue him for?"

A NEW KIND OF ANNOUNCEMENT.

A YOUNG wife, wishing to announce the birth of her first child to a friend in a distant city, sent the telegram "Isaiah 9:6," beginning "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given."

Her friend, more literal and less familiar with the Scriptures, read the message and said to her husband:

"Margaret evidently has a boy, but why on earth did they ever name him Isaiah? He must be healthy, though, for he weighs nine pounds and six ounces."

PERCY was a proud aesthetic,
Sadie Knackwurst said "Magnetic!
As I live he shall be mine!"

Percy studied Robert Browning,
Shelly, Keats and Swinburne, too
Listened to free lectures, frowning
As all intellectuals do.

Sadie wed him—thin, artistic,
Melancholic, blase—
And, with heart philanthropic,
Fed him up five times a day.

One day Sadie looked at Percy's
"You've deceived me! Cursed! Curses!
Curses—oh, where is love's young dream?"

Dropped a sodium chloride tear,
And phlegmatically uttered:
"Huh! what ra it, Sadie dear?"

"Where's your Robert Browning forehead?
Where's your Keats and Shelly sigh?
Blame me not if I'm a sorehead—
Your expression's like a pie!

"When you sit, you go ka-flumick!
You have lost all your ee-clatti!
You've a hemispheroid stomach!
Frankly speaking, you are fat!

"You are of the porcine genus,
With your gobble and your wheeze!
There is nothing more between us—
Settle with my lawyers, please!"

When the court released Miss Circe,
Off she started at high speed—
Hunting for another Percy
That she might take home and feed!

TO THE EDITOR.

The purport of this letter is two-fold

First—To express the admiration my associates and I feel for the successful campaign waged by you against that cruel sport, whippet racing to a finish.

Secondly. To enlist your aid and support as a well known anti-vivisectionist in a crusade we are about to launch.

We wish to have our laws so amended that henceforth no clam will be opened without previously having been given an anaesthetic; the present method being deemed most cruel.

My associates have selected me to write you, as some previous experiences I had led them to believe I could interest you in so worthy a cause

For several years I resided at Quohog, capital of Clambodia, a country but little known to the general public. While there it fell to my good luck to be presented to His Serene Highness, Ruhm Chowdah the XVIII. In the course of several delightful conversations he related the origin of one of the praiseworthy customs of his country.

It seems that a remote ancestor of His Serene Highness, on the distaff side, was suffering from a prolonged attack of melancholia. Nothing seemed to arouse him from his depression. One lucky day, a Friday, I believe, a fakir asked permission to entertain His S. H., believing he could break the unholy spell. Permission being granted, this wonderful man exhibited to the astonishment of the assembled court a troupe of trained clams, which, amongst other accomplishments, could sing the "Holy City."

This quite unusual feat so aroused H. S. H's curiosity and interest that he from then on took an interest in life and finally regained his former spirits and buoyancy.

To show his gratitude and appreciation of the latent musical and artistic talent of the clam, he decreed that a clam rampant should be incorporated on the arms of his country; also that the name of the reigning house should be changed to Klam Chowdah, and that no clam should be opened except by the following method:

The clams are spread before an attendant, who reads extracts from the works of one of their authors, Laura Jean Libby. This causes them to gape in wonder, whereupon they are at once sprayed with an anaesthetic.

While such a method is practical for Clambodia, it may not be so for our country, and we, therefore, most desire to enlist your help, my previous experience as the inventor of the Harmless Eye-Opener would be of great value.

I may add that the subjects of H. S. H. so fully agreed with his decrees that to this day even the greatest exclamation of admiration is invariably By Vulva.

The Dneister is a river near the northern part of Poland. It is noted for the numerous fish which are dotted in its narrow channels. It is navigable for nearly nine hundred miles.

The Bug is another river. It is also known as the Nuts, Squirrel and Boo yhatch river. It is named after a famous Russian general.

Boarding-House Geometry

A BOSTON man of scientific attainments has drawn up a "boarding-house geometry," which will be appreciated by all who have their being therein. His definitions are as follows:

1. All boarding houses are the same boarding houses.

2. Boarders in the same boarding house, and on the same floor, are equal to one another in the matter of price, but not in the matter of outlook.

3. A single room is that which has no parts and no magnitude.

4. The landlady of a boarding house is a parallelogram, an oblong, angular figure, which cannot be described, but is equal to anything.

5. All other rooms being taken, a single room is said to be a double room.

Among postulates and propositions the following are worthy of consideration:

1. A pie may be produced any number of times.

2. The landlady may be reduced to her lowest terms by a series of propositions.

3. A bee line may be made from one boarding house to another.

4. The clothing of a boarding house bed, although extended indefinitely in both directions, will never meet.

5. Any two meals at a boarding house are together less than one square meal.

Good Stories Told By Those Who Know How

BERT LEIGHTON of the Three Leightons has among his stock of stories of colored folks one about a darkey who won a watch that was raffled off in a barber shop.

Never before having been the owner of a watch, he wished to wear it prominently, so he attached the end of the chain to the button hole of his coat lapel and instead of dropping the watch in the little pocket let it hang outside. Then he proceeded to march proudly down the main street.

His efforts to attract attention to his newly acquired time-piece were soon rewarded, when he bumped into a poor friend who noticed the watch.

"Where did you-all get that there watch?" his friend inquired.

"Oh, I just bought it," was the prompt reply.

"I, it a good one?"

"Watcha mean is it a good one

"I mean do it keep good time?"

Highly indignant, the other exclaimed, "It keep good time! Why I want you to understand that this here ticker is guaranteed to keep purfick time."

"Well, den, what time is it now by your watch, mister man?"

Quick as a flash the other stuck the face of the watch close to the face of the inquisitive one and said, "There's what time it is!"

* * *

The other studied carefully and thoughtfully for a minute and then said in a convinced tone, "So it is, ain't it?"

* * *

LEIGHTON also tells one about a crowd of colored sports down South who each Sunday spent the day at a picnic grounds some distance from town. To while away the monotony of the train journey they usually had a crap game in the baggage car. One Sunday a devotee of the dotted cubes who had just money enough for his fare to the grounds was obliged, when the game started, to be a mere spectator.

Unable to withstand this torture, he turned to one of the players and said, "Lemme a dollar, will you?"

"I'm very sorry, Sam, but I can't oblige you, as this is my very last dollar," the player replied, as he fished out a crumpled note from his vest pocket and shook the dice for a throw.

Sam said nothing, but watched the player lose the throw and the dollar. Then he spoke up again.

"Gwan lemme a dollar, will ya?"

Unconcernedly the other took off his hat, dug out another dollar and put it down, saying:

"Sure enough, Sam, I would lend you a dollar in a minute, but this am my last one."

He shot the bones again and lost. Undaunted, he rolled down the cuff of his trousers, got another greenback, remarking as he did so

"Funny I didn't remember I got just one more left."

He put it down, rolled the bones again, and lost. "Sam, who was watching closely all the time, turned from him with disgust and said, "You just keep on wif them bones, they'll make you tell the truth!"

* * *

EDDIE of Corvalla and Eddie, has a peculiar sense of humor which he is apt to display at unexpected times and places.

The other day, strolling up to the stamp window in the postoffice, he asked the clerk, "Have you any nice fresh stamps today?"

The clerk, being somewhat of a humorist himself, answered, "You betcha," dove down into his desk and brought up a new sheet of a hundred stamps. Holding it up to Eddie, he said, "Take your pick."

"Gimme that one in the middle," said Eddie. "Sorry, sir, that one was ordered by telephone this morning," replied the clerk.

* * *

SOME one asked Eddie how long he had been married. "Ten years," answered Eddie.

"Oh, no, I haven't," replied Eddie, "I spent two years in Paris."

JOHNNY STANLEY, noted for his nimbleness on the stage, is also one of our best little repartee artists. It seems that once on the bill with him was a female acrobatic act which carried an announcer. This announcer, dressed in evening clothes, was so much taken up with the importance of his position that he used to get ready two hours before his act went on, and stand around the wings every afternoon and evening they saw him and the dress suit until it became quite a joke with them. No one ever saw him without the soup and fish scenery.

One evening, after the show, the whole troupe was invited to a dinner. Everybody was there on time except the gentleman of the dress suit. When he finally did make his appearance in the dress suit, Stanley rose, waved his hand at him and yelled:

"Go back, go back, you're not on for twenty minutes yet!"

* * *

STANLEY, who is a taxi fiend, entered an elevator one day in a very absent-minded mood. The operator slammed the door, and the elevator started for the roof. Turning to Stanley he asked, "Where to, mister?"

"Oh, drive me around the park a bit," replied Stanley!

TOM SMITH was telling a friend about a dreadful nightmare he had the other night.

I thought I was on a large desert," said Tom, "walking along minding my own business, when I happened to glance back and see in the distance a large lion creeping toward me. Not caring very much for lions, asleep or awake, I immediately began to look around for some place to go where the lion couldn't. About three or four miles in the distance I saw one lone tree, and I made for it at top speed. The lion was right in back of me and gaining all the time. At last I reached the tree, climbed to the top and looked down. There was the lion, licking his chops, rubbing against the tree and making motions for me to come down and join him. I was in a nice fix. For a few seconds I didn't know what to do."

Tom paused in his story and the friend inquired, "Well, what did you do, finally?"

"Woke up" said Tom. "Think I was going to let that lion make a fool of me the rest of the night?"

* * *

BILL tells another one of a third-class song and dance artist who led all the others, which is Bill's way of saying that he always opened the bills on which he appeared. This artist was always at war with the orchestra leaders about the tempo in which his songs should be played. At a theatre where he had played several times the leader had grown tired of being called down, and decided to teach him a lesson.

When the artist appeared for his act the leader played one of his songs, which he wanted loud and strong, very softly. The artist, between verses, hissed over the footlights "Forte, Forte," whereupon the leader yelled out in a voice which could be heard all over the theatre, "Shut up, you boob, we all know how much you're getting!"

* * *

FRANK TINNEY once played a season with a traveling minstrel troupe which gave an amateur night every Wednesday after the regular performance. It fell to Frank's lot to interview the ambitious amateurs and prepare them for their acts.

"Mr. Tinney," one of them said, "we'd like to put our act on next amateur night; it's a hear!"

"Glad to hear it," said Tinney. "What's the nature of your act?"

"It's a drama, called 'The Spy.'"

"Sounds good," said Frank. "How many people in it?"

"Sixty-five."

"Sixty-five," gurgled Tinney. "Where did you round up all those actors?"

"Cinch," replied the other. "You see this act is played by Company M of the National Guard."

"I gotcha," said Tinney. "Well, bring the boys around and let's see what you've got."

The sixty-five had stacked their guns and flung themselves all over the stage in various poses of leisure.

The action of the drama started off at once, but like all amateurs they seemed to forget they had voices, and Tinney in the wings was the only one in the house who caught a word of their play. The leading man, dressed as a captain, strolled over to the centre of the stage where three of the soldiers were playing cards. One of them, glancing up, said, loud enough for Tinney to hear, "Got anythin' on the hip, Cap?"

"Sure," replied the Cap as he fished out a half-pint bottle and handed it over. The first man took a pull at it and then passed it on to the next. The action of the piece was held up until that little half-pint bottle went the rounds of the whole sixty-five.

At this point in strolled a black-bearded individual in civilian clothes. Coming up to the card game, he appeared deeply interested and watched the players for about five minutes, during which time not a word was spoken. Then, suddenly, up jumped the Captain and, pointing his finger dramatically and accusingly at the newcomer, shouted:

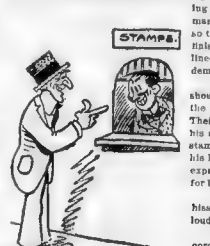
"Seize that man, boys, he's a spy!"

The men obeyed the order with alacrity, and the Captain said to the prisoner:

"If you have nothing to say before you die, you will be blindfolded and shot like the dog you are."

"You don't have to blindfold me," said the condemned actor. "I can die with my eyes open, like every brave American citizen."

"All right, boys," said the Captain, and shouting a bunch of orders he sent the trusty men of the company through an intricate twenty-minute drill, ignoring their captive, who stood leaning up against the wings smoking a cigarette and watching the show. The Captain manoeuvred his company so that when the drill was finished his company was lined up opposite the condemned spy ready to shoot.



"Ready, aim, fire!" shouted the Captain, and the report was deafening. Their victim merely folded his arms across his chest, stamped his foot and raised his head with a movement expressing his contempt for lead.

"Drop, you boob!" hissed the Captain, in a loud whisper, "drop!"

But the man who, according to all rules and regulations, should have been dead, gave another stamp of his foot and a toss of his head. His chance to play the hero to the gallery had come and he was taking full advantage of it. Finally the Captain, to save the act, pulled a big revolver from his belt and fired point blank at him. The spy, coming to his senses, dropped. Just as he dropped, a kid up in the gallery shouted:

Mirandy on the Superior Civilization of Man

By DOROTHY DIX

Published by permission from "Mirandy," just published in book form, by Hearst's International Library Company, copyrighted.

"I CAN always tell," remarked Mirandy with conviction, "when a man is dat henpecked at home dat he says 'our britches' when he talks about his pants. He's de man dat when he gits out whar his wife can't hear him is always lambastin' women, an' layin' ev'rything dat goes wrong, from de weather up an' down, at her door. Yassum, de man what crows de loudest abroad, sings de smallest on his own roost pole.

"Now dere's Br'er Jenkins dat dasn't call his soul his own when Sis' Jenkins is around, but, sakes alive, you ought to jest hear him when he gits up in de pulpit whar nobody can't dispute him. De way he wades into women is jest plumb scandalous, an' last night he shorely was on a high horse, caze he been readin' somethin' in de paper dat kinder backed him up. Of cose, de men in de congregation is scared to hold up his hands, no matter what dey thinks. Fer day's mos'ly married, an' is got to go home wid deir wives.

"But dis piece in de paper say dat one of dem college perfessers is done bust loose again, an' dat he say dat women is lots mo' civilized an' heathenish dan man is, an' ef he had a-been raised by his Pa, instead of by his Ma, dat he would a-been lots mo' of a perfect lady dan what he is.

"When Br'er Jenkins tells about dat, he fetches a sigh and says, 'How true dat is!' and Br'er Sim starts to holler 'Amen!' but he happen to ketch Sis' Tempy's eye an' he changes it to a kinder groan. Den Br'er Jenkins go on to tell how de perfesser say dat de Pas ought to fetch up de chilien so as to give 'em de benefit of de elervatin' masculine influcence, an' at dat I sing out:

"'Bless Lord, let the good day come!'

"Yassum, dat shorely would be de millennium dat de Good Book tells about whar de chilien cease from troublin' an' de mothers are at rest, an' dey can't hurry bit up too much for me. Hit always look lak to me dat dere warn't enough partnership in the chilien, noway. I don't see why a Ma snould ge ten times as much a Ma, as a Pa is a Pa. But dat's de way hit woks. Ike, he never claims our chilien but about two minutes a week. De balance of de time dey's mine. When little Teddy Roosterfelt is dirty, an' bad, an' has broken de neighbor's window, he says:

"'Woman, look what yo' child has done did!' but when dat angel chile fetches home de prize from de Sunday school, Ike, he stands on de street corner, an' swells out his chist, an' brags about 'his son.'

"Howsomever, dat ain't neder here nor dere. What I wants to know is how dat colleges perfesser found out dat women is mo' civilized dan man, an' dat fathers have a mo' refining influcence on chilien dan mothers had?

"Cose, I'se jest a po', ignorant ole woman, an' I sin't gwine spute wid a learned perfesser in a college, but all de men what I ever knowed thought dat you raised a baby lak you did a setter pup, an' dat de best thing to do when one got cryin' was to git so far away, an' so interested in a crap game dat you didn't hear it caterwaulin'.

"Den it seems lak to me dat I kinder took notice dat hit is men, an' not oncivilizated women, dat takes delight in seein' thing git hurt. I dis-remember ever seein' women set two dogs to chew each odder up, an' ef anuy of de mothers' clubs ever backed a prize fight, or any sister in good an' regular standin' in de chu'ch ever paid $25 for a seat to see men butter each odder to pieces, I never heard of hit.

"Yit when de perkice raided de barn whar dey was havin' whut they called a glove contest, do nex mawnin' me, an' Sis' Tempy, an' Sis' Hannah, an' all de odder deacons' wives had to hustle around an' pay our husbands out of de calaboose.

"An' as fer war—my land, but dey wouldn't be no mo' war of dere was only women in de world. Cose dey'd git mad, an' sass each odder over de back fence, an' maybe dere might be a little hair pullin', but de fust time any lady got scratched so de blood come, all de balance of de women would throw down deir weapons an' run an' try to bring her to wid smellin' salts. Den dey'd all set down together an' have a good cry, an' say dat dey reckon dey didn't mean all dey said, an' den dey'd kiss an', go home, an' borrow somethin' fer supper, jest to show dat dey was neighberly once mo'.

"Maybe dat perfesser is right, dat men is mo' civilized dan women, but did you ever see a house dat men live in widout no woman around? De blackin' brush will be on de mantle piece, an' de dirty dishes on de table, an' de tea kettle on de bed, an' de clothes will be strewed from one end to de odder, an' de dust will be a mile thick over ev'rything. Yassum, dat's so. When I goes away an' leaves Ike to keep house de only clean thing I finds when I gits home is de towel.

"An' hit's the same way 'bout dressin' up. My land, but ef de women was all dead de men would be a-gwine roun' in blankets befo' de year was out, an' wid beards so long dat dey would have birds' nests in 'em.

"Men don't dress up for each odder. Dey primps up for women. Befo' a man is married he fixes himself up to try to ketch some gal, an' after he's married he dresses up case his wife makes him, an' to save a family argyment. Yassum, ef I had a dollar for ev'ry time I'se made Ike put on a clean shut when he didn't want to, I spects I could buy out Mr. Rockjfeiler an' float away on seas of kerosene.

"Yassum, hit shorely am wonderful whut dem perfessers diskivers, an' I wonders how dey does hit, an' how dey happen to find out dat women is mo' civilized dan men. To men hit looks lak dat men an' women is much of a muchness—caze ef dey warn't, dey wouldn't match so well.

A Searching Criticism.

FIVE-YEAR-OLD HERBERT, scion of a bookish family, had learned to read so early and so readily that his first glimpses of storyland were growing hazy in his memory. One day he confided to his mother:

"Ruthie showed me her new book today, and it's the queerest thing you ever saw! Why, it just says, 'Is it a dog? It is a dog. Can the dog run?' and a lot of things like that! 'Course I was too polite to say so, but it didn't seem to me the style was a bit juicy."

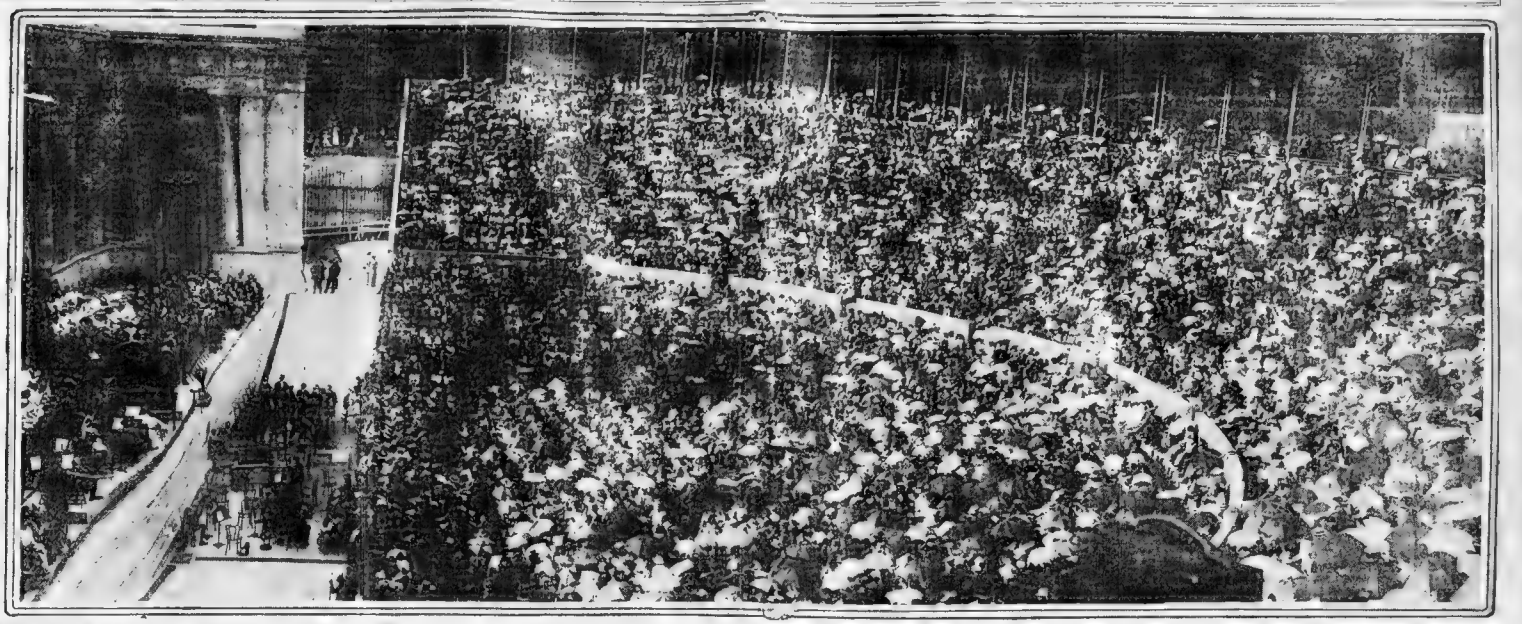
SCENE AT THE HEARST PEACE MEETING AT GREEK THEATRE

A vast throng gathered last Sunday in the famous amphitheatre of the University of California in the city of Berkeley, where a mighty chorus swelled the world cry for peace among all nations. The Greek theatre is a gift from Mr. Hearst to the great university.



MIGHTIEST VOICE OF PUBLIC OPINION EVER LIFTED URGES PEACE

The mightiest organized public opinion the world has ever known—the opinion of the united people of the United States in friendly alliance with other neutral nations, is calling upon the powers at war to come to peace today.

Boston, as always in the forward steps of the world's history, is leading. On October 2, in the schools of Boston and New England, PEACE DAY will be observed—an occasion unparalleled, when upon the mind and heart of every child will be impressed the universal lesson—"Peace and Friendship Among Nations."

Thousands of New England folk have written the AMERICAN pledging their support to the World Peace Committee. All that is necessary in this simple pledge of prayers and moral support, for the peace movement is simply the utilization of the power of public opinion. And public opinion is only what you think and I think when we think together.

It was the invitation of the AMERICAN and Mr. Hearst's other newspapers which first crystallized the public opinion and set the peace movement afoot. Boston responded with a great peace meeting on the Common. San Francisco did likewise. Today in New York it will gather at a similar demonstration. Twenty-one Governors have pledged themselves and twenty-four United States senators and hundreds Representatives to hold as many more men of prominence in their life

NOTABLES ON LIST.

In Massachusetts the list of peace workers begins with Governor Walsh and includes Mayor Curley and Samuel J. Elder and former Governor Long and Bishop Babcock—names on one of the men of whom the State is proud. It is fitting that Massachusetts and particularly Boston should be the first city to hold a PEACE DAY in the schools.

Superintendent of Schools Frankl. H. Dyer has also decided that PEACE DAY be observed. After the mass meeting on the common, and after consultation for their peace addresses with Mr. Dyer issued this statement:

"With the exception made that one public school of Boston take notice of the President's proclamation to observe Sunday, October 4, as a day of intercession for peace, I intend to send a letter calling on the principals and teachers of the schools in this city to observe Friday, October 2, as a day when reference may be made to the President's proclamation before the public school pupils, and I will also recommend peace exercises to be held in the school buildings where it is convenient to hold them.

"We cannot say enough of peace, and it is time for us to use some special occasion before the schools to call attention to the President's proclamation."

The AMERICAN desires to support the plans for PEACE DAY in every way, and with that end today suggests a peace program to be used in the schools. This program is only a suggestion and may be modified to fit the needs of the Public schools. Teachers who wish to do so may thus use this program—which appears elsewhere—as a basis for their PEACE DAY plans.

The AMERICAN has been asked to assist in securing speakers for the pageant or in giving utterance to peace sentiments, as expressed by song, as such schools, and it is planned to have a speaker of some prominence at each school. In combination with the PEACE DAY exercises will be a Health Day program in charge of the school authorities.

Meanwhile all Boston is hoping and praying for peace. In the churches today peace services will be preached. Dr. [illegible] rector of St. Paul's Cathedral, returned from the war zone, has planned to hold a [illegible] Week day noonforenoon [illegible] peace. He says:

"It is [illegible] next Wednesday to hold [illegible] We ask [illegible] pray for the cessation of the [illegible] for which the world is waiting. These services are open to [illegible] who will spare time [illegible] on Wednesday of each week [illegible] tion and prayer. The [illegible] be held at noon hour. He has requested all the clergy of the diocese to observe the day with special sermons and prayers.

The plans for PEACE DAY in the schools have received unstinted support. Mrs. Fannie [illegible] secretary of the American Peace Society, [illegible] street with the [illegible]

Nothing is so important as to get the young minds away from war. To hold a peace meeting in every school is an admirable idea.

"I believe thoroughly in getting before the minds of the public school children what peace means to a nation. It is vitally necessary to make [illegible] plain before the child mind.

"Boston is [illegible] so much of the opportunity [illegible] the children get [illegible] war pictures and [illegible] Let them also have some of the [illegible] of peace before the public meetings.

"We are more concerned with the child, in teaching peace [illegible] than in trying to [illegible] opinions of many adults.

"Upon the school [illegible] rests [illegible] Let the [illegible] with the notes of [illegible] children feel that they have some individual part in the meeting, either in a [illegible] in promoting peace. It [illegible] that they have some individual part in the meeting, either in a pageant or in giving utterance to

Peace Day Program for New England Schools

Here is a program, suggested by the Boston AMERICAN, for use by the schools of New England or Friday, October 2:

* * *

I. Peace March—Piano.
(Let the classes march to the main hall, each class headed by a pupil carrying an American flag, bordered in white (the Peace Flag)

II. Song, "God Bless Our Fatherland"—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

God bless our fatherland,
Keep her in heart and hand,
One with our own.
From all her foes defend,
Be her brave people's friend.
On all her realms descend,
Protect her throne.

III. Reading, by a pupil, of President Wilson's Proclamation for Peace Sunday, October 4.

IV. Singing by the School, "Peace Triumphant"—Theron D. Perkins.

V. Address by the Special Speaker of the Day.

VI. Recitation, "The Annual Cost of Armed Peace."

VII. Song, "Let Us Love Peace." (Dedicated to former President Taft)—E. R. Bell.

VIII. Song, "America," by the Whole School, Standing.

The AMERICAN will be glad to answer inquiries as to how this program may best be carried out, as to the words of songs, and such matters.

[illegible] Leon Mandel on a commission [illegible] and we are glad that it is now being given publicity by the Hearst newspapers.

Mrs. Susan B. Stevens of the Woman's Board of Trade said:

"Those meetings in our public schools carrying out among the children the principles laid down in the Peace Day proclamation for Sunday, October 4, are excellent to get the lesson in an attractive way before the children.

"I credit some the Boston AMERICAN for giving publicity to it. I hope that every mother in this city will encourage her children to talk [illegible] in the home. We've had no more such talk [illegible] than any effort to offset it with exercises on peace in April.

"One of the warmest endorsements of Mr. Hearst's proposal for a peace commission came from James H. Hand, secretary of the Niagara branch of the New York Peace Society, who said:

"I am only too glad to express our approval of Hearst's plan to send a Peace Commission to Europe for the purpose of bringing about mediation. It is what we must do for us to mobilize the forces of [illegible] Every day's delay in bringing this war to a close means the destruction of [illegible] human property, bringing poverty and untold misery to tenths of [illegible] subscribed to the President the September thirty thousand dependent women and children.

"On August 21 I received a telegram from President Wilson [illegible] for a letter giving full particulars of the plan for the Peace Commission. On August 22 the plan was [illegible] letter, signed by President Wilson [illegible]

"I desire to [illegible] the proposal [illegible] to the people of this nation.

"WOODROW WILSON."

CLEVELAND DEFEATS RED SOX 5 TO 1

Tedrow Pitches Naps to Victory; Young Hurler Is Wild, but Boston Sluggers Fail to Hit Him Safely with Men on Bases

CLEVELAND, Sept. 19.—Boston's pennant chances in the American League received a severe jolt when Birmingham's tail-enders took the final game of the series, 5 to 1. Tedrow, a southpaw from Portsmouth, in the Ohio State League, was on the mound for the Naps, and for the first part of the game had easy sailing. His control in the first three innings was very poor, six of the Red Sox being given free transportation to the initial sack. Good fielding, however, coupled with a lack of ease hits, kept the Bostonites scoreless until the fifth.

Everett Scott suffered an injury to his knee while sliding into third base when he made the triple that netted Clarkson a great run. Scoring run in yesterday's contest and was forced to retire at the end of the sixth inning today.

The Naps lost no time in scoring, two runs being chased across the pan in the first. Lobold and Chapman were easy outs, but Johnson and Jackson each contributed a single, and Larry came through with a triple to left. Dec and Joe scoring.

NAPS SCORE IN SEVENTH.

Collins then held them scoreless until the big blow off in the seventh when three more Naps registered at Carrigan's plate.

Graney started with a double off the right field wall. Barbare a sacrifice and him to third and after O'Neill died, Tedrow surprised every one by stealing home by pulling on Collins, who was over Lewis' way. Lobold scored and O'Neill reached third.

Lobold then died, Shy but Chapman who was batting for Jamieson in right, he too struck out, and Chapman was left on second when the ball found Collins for an easy catch in the box.

Tedrow had no trouble fall in the Cleveland half of his control, after Hooper and Scott had been retired, Speaker drew Collins' free pass and Lewis' double caused both runners to score. Hooper's sacrifice to Jackson and Gardner's single to third filled the sacks, but Speaker's hasty throw to first forced Gardner to O'Neill.

The most sensational play of the game occurred in the fifth, when Hooper lifted a fly to center field, which Graney judged perfectly and pulled down after a hard run. Graney then made a perfect throw to the plate and Speaker

YOU MAKE A TALLY.

The Sox finally brought in a run apiece in the fourth. Speaker was thrown out by Chapman but Lewis doubled to left. Barbare let Chapman retire first and then, Whaling stopped at third, scoring on Hoby's grounder to Johnston. Janvrin singled, but Tedrow tossed out Gardner.

Speaker singled in the seventh with one out, but stayed there as Hobitzell and Janvrin went weak fouls to Johnston and O'Neill. In the eighth Carrigan walked. Hemphill was sent in to run for him and Kelly batted for Collins. Kelly's best effort was a fly to Graney.

In the ninth, Hooper, Gainer and Speaker were retired on flies.

LAWRENCE IS DEFEATED BY NEW LONDON

Connecticut Champions Tie Up Series by Great Eighth-Inning Rally.

LAWRENCE, Sept. 19.—New London came from behind in the eighth inning of today's game when a base Lynch's error allowed the visitors to score three runs and win the game, 4 to 3.

By winning today New London evened up the series, which now stands two all.

Pearson and Powers were both taken from the slab. The substitution of Hilderbrand, who batted for Powers in the eighth inning, proved a lucky stroke on the part of Manager McCann. Hilderbrand drew a base on balls and that was the beginning of the rally which resulted in a win for New London.

Waite drove in the tieing run after Lynch had a chance to retire him on on balls, two doubles and a single and a foul ball.

25,000 WATCH GIANTS CONQUER

Cubs Beaten, 5 to 4, in a Hard-Fought Game Marked by Wretched Fielding of Giants, Who Make Seven Errors.

Saier's Homer in Ninth Gave New York Fans Scare, but Tesreau Managed to Prevent Any Further Scoring.

POLO GROUNDS, New York, Sept. 19.—Twenty-five thousand fans saw the Giants wallop the Cubs by a score of 5 to 4 here today.

Tesreau started off poorly in the first inning, issuing passes to Leach and Good, after which Zimmerman doubled, scoring them. Zimmerman scored when Fletcher fumbled Bues' grounder.

The Giants also made three runs in their half on a single, base on balls, a double by Robertson and Grant's single.

McGraw's men went ahead in the third on a walk to Burns, Fletcher's single, a stolen base, a wild pitch and a hit by Merkle.

Manatagua Wins Off Marblehead

The final handicap race of the Corinthian Yacht Club series was sailed yesterday off Marblehead in a mild north-east breeze. The course was twenty-one miles.

The Manatagua, owned by W. A. Stevens, was an easy winner in the Class A races. The big feature of this contest was the fight between the Sagonara and the Amoret for third place. The former won out by seconds in a great finish.

Evers Knew the Way to Win the Pennant

Needed a Field Secretary—So He Got One

"JOHNNY BOSTON BEANS" CONNOLLY, "FIELD SECRETARY" OF THE BRAVES

By NICK FLATLEY.

Do you know why the Boston Braves are up there in front, leading the National League race and to all intents and purposes the coming opponents of the Mackmen in the World's Series?

It's because they have an attache that no other baseball club ever boasted—to wit, a field secretary.

Johnny Boston Beans Ralph Waldo Emerson Connelly—that's he.

Johnny B. B. is the secret of the Braves' success. If they win the pennant you can't convince Johnny Evers, in fact, any of the players, that the bat boy—the field secretary—we almost said bat boy—isn't the cause.

Johnny Evers brought it about. The Trojan signed him up.

Evers, like all other baseball stars, is imbued with more or less superstition. Early in the season he noticed that, when a player especially respectacled, typically Boston South came out to Walpole street and assisted the regular batboy of the club to handle the Braves' bats, victory perched on the Boston banners.

GETS REGULAR JOB.

That was enough. The regular bat boy was fired. H. B. R. W. E. was hired. It was early in July. Ever since, as you [illegible] know, the Clubbers have been passing the last out at the enemy.

It's simply been ever since that time Johnny, etc., has been junior manager in the vicinity of the dugout.

His face is the face of the student. His manner of acting the quintessence of culture. His enunciation the clear cut tonsils of Boston supereducation. His back hair is long and [illegible]

BAY STATE WINS BIG GOLF MATCH

Rhode Island Team Beaten in Annual Play by 14 to 1 Count.

Massachusetts won its annual victory over the Rhode Island state team of golfers yesterday at Braeburn. The contest consisted of 10 single matches in the morning and five foursomes in the afternoon. Massachusetts won by 14 matches to 1, and there were two of the regular Massachusetts team absent.

Francis Ouimet led the home talent, and came through successfully, as did his team mates with the one exception of W. C. Chick. Chick proved to be the only loser of the day, but there was no disgrace to his defeat.

His opponent H. E. Kenworthy was four down with six to play when he started a spurt that no one could touch and by finishing two holes even to tie for the last six holes and to win five of them and end the match out of the fire. The summary:

7 RUNS IN ONE SESSION ROUSE A 20,000 CROWD

With the Score 3 to 1 Against Them the Stallings Crew Rallies in the Sixth Inning and Hammers the Invaders Into Submission — Pittsburghers Are Literally Smothered by the Furious Onslaught.

"No-Hit" Davis Starts for the Braves and Completes 11 2-3 innings of no-hit pitching—Then the Pirates Gather Three Runs and All Looks Gloomy Until the Sixth Inning Fenway Park Debacle

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

Before a wildly delirious crowd of 20,000 persons, the Braves played the Brobdignagian inning against the Pittsburgh Pirates at Fenway Park yesterday afternoon and won a glorious game of ball by a score of 9 to 3.

The crash came in the sixth round. Cooper, a left-handed pitcher, had been mowing down the Braves with alarming regularity, only his wildness up to that time giving our boys a chance to get on the bases at intervals.

Then, like a bolt from the sky, the Braves fell on him and converted a score that was 3 to 1 against them into figures of 8 to 3 in their favor.

Whitted was the first man up in this round, and the little fellow gave an indication of what was to follow when he drove a red hot liner directly into Wagner's hands. Big Schmidt then stepped to the plate and pasted a terrific grounder in the direction of Vlox. The little fellow was lucky to block the screecher let alone getting the Butcher at first.

GOWDY DRIVES IN THREE RUNS.

The crowd became noisy at once, and when Cooper failed to locate the plate for Smith, giving him a pass to first, wild cheers issued from 20,000 throats. Pandemonium broke from its leash when Rabbit Maranville was also passed, filling the bases with only one man out.

Hank Gowdy, the Duke of Sycamtum, stepped to the plate, and when he drove the ball to deep centre-field and knocked the paint off a best sign, the noise that greeted his clout made the demonstration that preceded it appear like a whisper.

For the Duke of Squantum's terrific smash cleared the bases and put Hank on second. Russ Stallings was losing no tricks, so he sent Oscar Dugey up to bat for George Davis. Oscar clicked a fine single to centre, scoring Gowdy, and on the throw to the plate he ran down to second. Before the latest National Leaguer was yanked out of the box and Conselman was sent in to relieve the tide.

DAVIS STARTS THE BLE.

He could not do it. Stallings, playing his hand for all it was worth and shoved Moran in to bat for Mann. The little fellow tried hard, but his best was a high fly to Kelley.

Captain Johnny Evers, however, was right there with the goods and he got a single to left, putting Dugey on third. Still playing his hand to the limit, Stallings rushed Connolly to the plate to bat for Cather. Joe responded with a scorcher that skimmed off Vlox and bounded toward the right field foul line. Before the three chasers got the ball back to the diamond, Dugey had scored. Evers was on third and Connolly himself was at the middle station.

CROWD IN A FRENZY.

George Whitted advanced to the batting line for his second trip up in the inning, and cut loose with a beauty single to centre, which sent Evers and Connolly scurrying over the plate.

While all this was going on, the crowd was in a frenzy, and it did no cheering until long after Whitted had killed off trying to steal second. From that time on, the game was simply a bugeye ride for the Braves.

DAVIS STARTED WELL.

In the opening round, Davis retired the Pirates on five pitched balls. Cheery, first man up, flied to Mann, Collins was out on a grounder, Maranville to Schmidt, and Kelly drove a fierce liner to Mann.

In the last half, the Braves started out all right, but didn't accomplish much. Mann worked Cooper for a pass and Gowdy sent a grounder to [illegible] but Cather and Whitted went out on quick rounds of grounders.

The Pirates did considerable business in the second, aided by fortune. Vlox was passed for Konetchy popped to Maranville, but Wagner came through with a single to left, putting Vlox on second. The runners did not advance as Moriarty flied to Whitted back of third base and moved up when Cowan drew a pass.

This filled the bases. Cooper, with two strikes on him, hit a very weak grounder that rolled toward third. Smith got to the ball, but Vlox had scored before he could handle it, and the throw to first was too late.

ERROR AIDS BRAVES.

Davis and Smith were retired in the Locals in Boston's half of the second. Maranville got a life, reaching second when Colling muffed his fly in short right field after a hard run. Gowdy got a similar break, sending the Rabbit over the path, but Davis ended the round by being called out on strikes.

To open the third Kelly hit a hot one at Schmidt who fumbled, but Davis reversed matters by a quick "Butch's" toss for the out. Vlox pasted the ball for up the left field banking for two bases. Wagner fanned and Smith threw out Wagner.

In Boston's half, Mann walked again and the crowd grew animated when Evers drew [illegible] to [illegible] The runners advanced on Cather's neat sacrifice. A groan went up when Whitted was called out on strikes and there were sighs when Schmidt was thrown out by Vlox.

ANOTHER HIT FOR WAGNER.

After Smith had been retired, Maranville reached first on Vlox's fumble, stole second as Cooley fanned and lost on a throw the efforts were wasted, however, as Davis also fanned.

In the fourth Collins beat out a

ATHLETICS WILL HAVE BIG EDGE GOING INTO WORLD SERIES, CLAIMS TY COBB

Written Expressly for the Boston Sunday American.

By TY COBB.

Unless the Red Sox are able to give the Athletics some real cause for alarm in the next three weeks, the American League champions are going to have a big edge on the National League's representatives in the coming world's series.

The way things look now, the Mackmen will be merely coasting for the last two weeks of the season. They will have plenty of time to get thoroughly rested up and groomed for the big post-season battles.

The National League race seems certain to last until almost the last day, with whichever club wins the flag thoroughly fagged out by its work in grabbing the championship.

WEARIED CLUB CANNOT FIGHT.

That is how it was with the Tigers in 1907 and 1908. Both of those years we had to fight like mad right down to the wire. We played the White Sox in that final game and it is one that I never shall forget.

"Wild Bill" Donovan, now manager of the Providence International League club, and hero of many a grilling battle when the Tigers were in the championship chase, pitched for us. We got him a lead right at the start of the game and he hurled the best brand of ball possible, shutting out the Sox and giving them few scoring opportunities at any time.

STRAIN KILLS AMBITION.

It took every ounce of strength our club possessed to grab that flag and when we went into the world's series we had very little pepper or anything else left. We were just naturally too tired and spent to care much about the big series, even the difference between the winners' and losers' ends was not enough to rejuvenate us.

I think that the attitude of most of the Tigers was that they wanted to get the series over and rest up. The players as well as they are, of course, but in a more or less mechanical fashion and without the fighting spirit and vigor that make a club really formidable. Just going out to do the best you can and not worry if the "breaks" are against you is not the proper state of mind for a winning ball club.

You have to be ready to fight for every point and to regard it as the greatest calamity of your life if you make an error or fail to make good in a pinch at bat.

NO PITCHERS FOR MACKS.

In 1907 the Detroit club had a little more material than in 1908, but the race was nevertheless a heart-breaker. The Tigers practically won the pennant on their final eastern trip of the year, when we took seven out of eight. When we got home everybody felt that he never wanted to see another ball game and we went into the struggle against the Cubs then at the height of their power, without enthusiasm.

I am not saying that we could have been able to down the marvelous Chance machine, even if we had been at our best, but we certainly would have put up a better fight.

Unless Connie Mack can get New York or Boston will have a pitching staff in shape for a world's series engagement against the slugging Mackmen when October rolls around. Some of Stallings' hurlers, particularly Tyler, are showing signs of wear and tear, while McGraw's staff, barring Jeff Tesreau, who has the physique and strength of a grizzly bear, is evidently being overworked.

LOOKS EASY FOR ATHLETICS.

To the rest of the New York or Boston players will have to give all that is in them to win the National League championship and they will probably regard a rest as the most desirable thing in the world after the games they are due to face the American League champions. Even if everything else were even, I should want to place my bets on the Philadelphians in the world's series.

Under the conditions that are practically sure to obtain this year, it looks like an odds-on gamble that the Athletics will eat up either the Giants or Braves.

It is very true that the Mackmen have had a bad stumble and that they haven't been able to beat any club with much consistency lately, but they were so far in front when the [illegible]

SOX 1915 OUTLOOK BRIGHT

I notice that Clark Griffith, of the Red Sox, will have a good look next season, and that he is of the opinion that he will have the one team to beat. I also [illegible] the champion of 1914 [illegible] old hats the Mackmen will [illegible] that perhaps this [illegible] spired more by hatred of [illegible] rival than by sound judgment.

I cannot believe that [illegible] have established their [illegible] on luck alone, and if [illegible] better club in the [illegible] how Lewis gives them [illegible] prove it.

Griffith is right in [illegible] the Bostons will be [illegible] the 1915 pennant chase, [illegible] of the dead wood has [illegible] the club now and the [illegible] men are playing fine ball and apparently trying hard all the [illegible]

Wood, in good physical [illegible] is one of the stars of baseball [illegible] has proved his worth, and [illegible] like one of the best youngsters [illegible] the 1914 crop, though he has had so very favorable opportunities [illegible] I noticed at the Athletic [illegible] Wood will come [illegible] in 1915. GLEN COVE, L. I., Sept. 19.—Mrs. H. Arnold Jackson of Boston, today won the Women's national golf championship when she defeated Miss Elaine V. Rosenthal, eighteen-year-old Chicago girl, up in eighteen holes.

The match was hot and tuck all the way. Both women played steadying golf, although Mrs. Jackson's greater experience stood her in good stead at trying moments. The play was in a strong wind.

GOLF

By H. P. Farrington.

ONE more great golfing honor for Massachusetts and Boston arrived yesterday with the news from Glen Cove, Long Island, N. Y., that Mrs. H. Arnold Jackson of Oakley had won the women's national title this year.

• • •

HER victory is a most popular one and fulfils a prediction made in this column last Spring to the effect that Mrs. Jackson would be a much more serious contender for golfing honors this year, than ever before in her extensive golfing career.

• • •

IT will be remembered that Mrs. Jackson as Miss Katherine C. Harley won Fall River when the national title the year it was played at Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C., but her win this year is considered a greater achievement, as it has come as the result of the most religious practicing and thoughtful golf of an entire year. She won the Eastern women's title at Greenwich, Ct., this Spring and her golf as a whole throughout the year has been of the soundest and most consistent variety.

• • •

MASSACHUSETTS golfers turned out in very respectable numbers at Newton for the open two-day Fall meeting. There were 14 players entered during the two days. This number is short of the total competitors on both days of some of the 16 players in the entries may be attributed to the [illegible] match at Lake Burn, and the [illegible] at the Merrimack Valley C. C. in Lawrence.

• • •

BOSTON golfers extended the hand of good fellowship to their rivals from Rhode Island when they met yesterday at Brae-Burn. Their next act was not in keeping with the hand-clasp, for the local players then secured their clubs and went after the representatives of the Ocean State in a manner that dashed aspirations for victory. With 9 wins and one loss of the ten matches to be played the outcome was assured without the foursome arranged for the afternoon.

• • •

THERE one single match that was lost by Massachusetts was remarkable. C. Chick on his own course lost after being four up and one to play. He, Kenworthy of the Rhode Island team played the last six holes with an average of 2 under par, and Chick was obliged to [illegible] the fifteenth, and lost the match by 1 up.

• • •

THIS week the golfers have the [illegible] open amateur four-some at the Allendale C. C. to look forward to. Prizes are offered the players making the best [illegible] on either Friday or Saturday on the pretty nine-hole course in Newton-ville.

• • •

THERE is a small fortune awaiting some gifted scientist who will [illegible] a way and a [illegible] of playing golf [illegible] afternoon golf holidays in the fall always find a few players with [illegible] holes to play, trying to [illegible] their rounds in total darkness.

Harvard is probably the best off of any of the football teams in the country in respect to its backfield. Brickley and Mahan, the two stars of 1913, the former the most consistent drop-kicker we have ever seen and the latter an exceptional end runner, a good average punter, with ability to place his kicks, and a man who under practice and in his play on a class team demonstrated exceptional ability with the forward pass. He has not been used in that respect very much, as Harvard's game is not dependent upon it.

With Bradlee, a stout line plunger, to supplement these two, the combination is ideal. Like Yale, Harvard will have some breaks to fill up in its line, but there is a lot of material from the scrub and freshman of last year. Altogether it looks as though Haughton could be able to start out with a thoroughly developed backfield who have played together and can be slipped in and out whenever needed.

Meantime he can give his substitutes practice. He will have to get ready for his Michigan game, for that is important, but these veterans in the backfield will help very materially.

YALE HAS MANY STAR PLAYERS.

If one could count on the material for Yale's backfield remaining intact this season and if games were decided upon the number of possible first-class backs, the Blue would certainly stand in the foreground, for with Knowles, Kearney, Wilson, Ainsworth, Pumpelly, Le Gore, Cornell, McLeish and Millburn, he array looks striking. Unfortunately the old saying is true that there never was a first-class football team without a good line, and that brings up another question, for Yale lost Hart from behind a certain and centre in Martine, her two guards, Captain Ketcham and Pendleton, Warren, their tackle, and Avery, super end, besides Cooney, the substitute centre and general utility man at guard.

That is something of a sweeping out of a line of forwards. One loss not so much of a loss as the Centre be moved from the back field into position, a position he moved with credit, but the combination would have been stronger with Captain Wilson in the backfield and Wilson capable for either place this year. Yale ranks there are developed men, two men who play in centre field and a probable centre, Chatfield, Taylor, and Miller another possible centre, Cohen, Talbot, Hinsdale, Hall, who is Robertson, Waldo and Wyman, guards, to up the first line of material.

It looks as though Yale would have to develop some of its freshman material of last year or substitutes to build up a line to take the lists good backs.

PRINCETON LACKS COMPETITION.

Princeton started out last year with a rush, and before the first of November its team was going at such a pace as that of any on the season, but when stiffer opposition was offered on November 15 the attack of the heavy teams the attack lost something of its power, although in the early part of the Harvard game, in spite of the slippery field, the line plunging was effective. This year Princeton starts out with Penfield as field coach and under a committee with "Bake" Ames at its head.

Everybody back in the late 80's remembers the marvelous kicking and running of this Princeton Terrapin has ought to say, incidentally, that Ames' ability on the golf course now very nearly equals his former quality on the football field. He has also a son coming on at school now who is going to make an athlete, too.

The rest of the committee consists of Taylor, Sheffield, Herring and Parr, and this committee is to have the actual charge. Princeton was unfortunate in having two wet days for its Dartmouth and Harvard games last year and no opportunity to show what its team could do on a dry field.

Hence the test until they came to this Yale game was inconclusive. That game ended in a tie, with Princeton's plucky park stalling off what looked for a time like the r defeat.

The University of Pennsylvania is somewhat in the same position as

Harvard Managers Arrange for 42,000 at Michigan Game

The Harvard football management expects a regular "Yale game" crowd at the Harvard-Michigan contest of October 31. Application blanks for the contest will be mailed to each Harvard alumnus and there will be a seating capacity of 42,000 for the game.

Here in the East it is the belief that "Hurry Up" Yost will have an eleven up to the standard of his crack teams of recent years. Had he believed that this year's aggregation might prove weaklings, it is argued that he would have never accepted a position on Harvard's 1914 schedule.

ORONO, Me., Sept. 19—Coach E. R. Cochems of Maine, tried out twenty-three men in the opening game with Fort McKinley and in ideal baseball weather Maine rolled up a score of 43 to 2 in the last minute of play. Jones of Fort McKinley tackled behind the line for a safety, giving the soldiers their only score.

Allen, a freshman from Hebron, played the entire game and Estes, Priest, Greeley and Spiers, also of the entering class, were given a tryout.

The Fort McKinley boys have only been in training for a few days but played a hard game and in the second period had Maine for downs on the one yard line. Hamilton, Fairfax and Knunemaker played the best for the soldiers, while Miller Rice and Bell did usual and good work for Maine.

FACTORY WORKING FULL FORCE TO SUPPLY DEMAND

Willys Declares That Never in the History of His Company Has Business Been Better.

American automobile manufacturers e facing the brightest prospects nce the inception of the industry, in a opinion of John N Willys president of the Willys-Overland Company d second largest manufacturer of tomobiles in the world. Since his turn from the war zone, Mr Willys s made a careful survey of business nditions in the United States and clares himself exceedingly well ased with the outlook

Mr Willys says "Automobile buildon this side of the Atlantic have thing to fear because of the terle conditions abroad. For a while, lack of transportation facilities l abnormally high insurance rates opered foreign business, but since seas have become practically free this strange is more reasonable, ext shipments are being resumed on arge scale. With the exception of warring countries, the business the entire civilized world is Americs for the trading

In drawing my conclusions I must, necessity, use the business of my n company as a criterion, to some tent. Upon returning to this coun- after an absence of two months and that never in the history of the Willys-Overland Company has our usiness been better. For the months f September and October our contact schedules call for approximately 75 per cent. more cars than the schedules of a year ago. But a careful investigation of conditions indicates that if we build every car called for by the schedules we will still fall far short of the demand

"Our factory men are working full force, full time and full pay. Yet we have on hand fully 1,000 more unfilled orders that we had at this time last year. We have orders for more than five million dollars' worth of cars for immediate shipment. And this is in ite of the fact that our shipments e averaging more than fifty more rs per day than during the correcponding period of 1913.

From June 30, the start of our fiscal ar, and September 1, we have reived more than double the number orders received during the same od of time last year. In three o months our business was more an $2,000,000 greater than that of 13, our best previous year.

"A short trip through the East ows that the retail sales of Overnd cars are far in advance of those any previous year. New York city one has greater sales than last year by more than 100 per cent. Philadelphia, Boston, Washington, Baltimore, Rochester, Buffalo, Syracuse and other Eastern points show similar gains.

"Moreover, the prospects for future business are fully as bright as the present realities. The first panic due to the war has gone and business has regained its normal equilibrium.

We have tangible and substantial evidence that we are facing the most prosperous year we have ever experienced."

Million Dollars for Enlargements

Business depression in general seems to have had little effect on the motor car industry during the past year. Manufacturers almost universally report the biggest year in their histories. Expansion has been general.

Dodge Brothers, a Detroit manufacturing firm, are spending a full million dollars on additions and improvements to its already enormous works.

There seems to be a well-founded belief among local automobile men that the entrance into the field of Dodge Brothers has had much to do with the lowering of prices. Other manufacturers are supposed to have read the handwriting on the wall, and are determined not to be caught napping.

Great Activity in Motor Truck Field

In commenting on the general business and war conditions as affecting the commercial motor vehicle industry, Mr Day Baker, district manager of the electric division of the General Vehicle Company, says: "In common with most New England institutions, we are feeling the effects of the stringent money market and the war scare. However, orders are coming in and we are entering a number to be filled when the manufacturers start their places on full time. The Falvish Paper Company of Pittsburg have just ordered a five-ton electric, and are just about to put in commission one of the handsomest half-ton electric delivery wagons that ever came to Boston

WAR'S EFFECT ON INDUSTRY BENEFICIAL

Destruction of Horses and Motor Vehicles Will Increase Demand.

An increased w[illegible] demand for automobiles and motor trucks will result from the European war in which America should profit. This demand will be produced by the destruction of thousands of motor vehicles used for military purposes and the rendering unfit for private uses of many thousands more; by the total or partial suspension of production of these vehicles in the factories of Europe; by the requisitioning and purchase of horses for army service, the loss of horse flesh in the war and the inability to replace this loss for several years following the close of the war

The commandeering of horses and motor vehicles by the military authorities created a scarcity of vehicles for farm and commercial work in all the countries involved. If hostilities are prolonged, shipments of horses from America probably will result in depletion of our own supply and in increased prices.

While war continues the demands of countries outside of Europe for motor vehicles will be diverted to the United States. Most of the automobile trade of the world, exclusive of Canada, has been supplied by France, Germany, the United Kingdom, Italy and Belgium. Their combined exports in 1913 amounted to more than $80,000,000 whereas our own exports of motor vehicles and parts for the last fiscal year aggregated $39,000,000.

After peace is declared, several year will be needed to breed horses enough to replenish the supply and the capacity of the European automobile factories will be taxed to meet the requirements of reviving agriculture, manufacture and commerce at home.

Motor Car Increases Sales Efficiency

The matter of providing salesmen with automobiles instead of requiring them to depend on railroad trains and trolley cars in calling up on the trade, is a question that is now receiving careful consideration by the heads of many large wholesale houses and manufacturers.

In line with this idea, the Metz Automobile Company, of Waltham, has just issued for free distribution a neat and cleverly illustrated booklet addressed to the heads of sales departments, and entitled, "Sold by Automobile."

Its text is confined to plain business argument. To read it is to gain valuable ideas, for whoever wrote it certainly is familiar with the ways of salesmen. Among other things it says:

"All salesmen study timetables. They try to make connections. They figure on train schedules and interburban trolley car connections. Unconsciously, they allow these computations a to weigh more than they are worth, as compared with the importance of getting the order."

Great Demand for Low-Priced Cars

Among the leading automobile manufacturers who find that the European war is having no deterrent effect on the motor car business in this country is H. W. Ford president of the Saxon Motor Company.

"We are still behind on orders despite the fact that our factory is working to capacity all the time," says Mr. Ford. "In the month of August, which is generally considered a dull month, we shipped 900 cars. During the first half of September we shipped 600 cars, and our output for the month will be 1,500 cars. For October our schedule calls for 1,000 cars or more

"The main difficulty we are facing is to get the cars out fast enough. There can be only one answer and that is that prosperity is again striking all lines of business and industry. We have been blessed with great crops, which means that the farmers have money. It also means real prosperity for the rank and file everywhere."

MAKES GOOD AVERAGE.

As the automobile increases in efficiency each year a better average mileage each hour is made over the roads by tourists. The improved condition of the highways throughout the country also plays an important part. Recently a 1913 seven-passenger Cole six-cylinder touring car made a run of 35 miles from St. Louis to Allentown, Mo., in 1 hour 15 minutes. This is an average of slightly more than 28 miles an hour. The return trip was made in practically the same time

IMPROVEMENT IN CONDITION OF REALTY MARKET

Brokers Report Increased Demand for Residential Property in Suburbs.

ESSEX ST. ESTATE SOLD

The sale of high-class Back Bay real leases, increased activity in suburban property, and the transfer of a large down-town parcel featured the real estate market during the past week.

While developments of a sensational order were lacking, there were several deals of an interesting character both in number of transfers and value of property involved, there was considerable improvement over the preceding week.

Brokers handling property in several suburbs, including Dorchester, Roxbury, West Roxbury and Newton, reported a number of sales. Improvement in the market for property in the Back Bay was also discernible.

Land men, operating in and about the Metropolitan District, also report improved conditions. This increase in the demand for suburban property is partially attributed to the warm weather of the past week.

The principal development of the week was the sale by J. Sumner Draper and Mark Temple Dowling of the five-story mercantile property at Nos. 111 and 125 Essex street. The purchaser was Harold H. Brown. The estate is valued by the Board of Assessors at $83,700, of which $51,700 is on the 2,350 square feet of land.

The transfer to the city of Boston by ex-Governor Foss of the lot of land, containing 43,263 square feet on Huntington avenue, at the corner of Hemenway street, was also a leading feature of the week. The price paid Foss for the lot was the same as the assessed valuation—$140,600.

Expect Revival of Mortgage Business

Indications pointing to a revival of the mortgage business to the point where it was before the opening of the European war were apparent during the past week.

The increases over the preceding week of the number and amount of mortgages placed was one favorable omen. Another was the added optimism with which mortgage brokers spoke of the situation.

Mortgages of small valuation were particularly affected by the increase. This was due to the fact that small investors are again commencing to resume operations. Large investors and banks are still feeling their way with caution.

This ultra-conservatism on the part of big trustees and savings banks has prevented the placing of a number of large loans. Because of the continued closing of the stock market, however, and the consequent increase in the amount of funds lying idle, it is expected that this type of investor will soon take an active hand in the mortgage market.

Five Ways by Which to Sell Your Property

Helpful Rules Laid Down by the Real Estate Bulletin.

According to the Real Estate Bulletin the five ways to sell property are:

Have him put a sign on the property. Buyers or renters like to inspect the neighborhood they fancy or desire, and the consequent increase in the sign on the property with confidence.

Tell him to advertise liberally and back him up in the expense to be deducted from the commission.

In a large property extra printing, booklets, plans, etc., owners pay expense are necessary. Tell your agent to go ahead and do it properly. Never butt in on the agent's work.

Dwellings Under Way at Blenheim

A number of lots at Blenheim Park, Atlantic, were reported sold last week by Gerald J. Doherty, who is in charge of the development of the property. The property borders directly on the new Metropolitan boulevard overlooking the ocean. Of the original 175 lots all but twenty-two have been sold. Lots range in size from 3,200 to 6,000 square feet. Five dwelling houses are already under way.

Realty Board Acts on Elevator Laws

Regulations on elevators and escalators are being considered by the committee on building laws of the Boston Real Estate Exchange. Members of the exchange affected by these regulations have been requested by the committee to forward their views which recommendations as they may deem unnecessary or indivisable, or working needless hardship and expense to owners or tenants.

Plan New Dwellings for Tract in Newton

N. J. Soderlund, a builder, has purchased a large tract of land on Prospect street, Newton, between Brookline and Marlboro streets, from the Maria M. Gay estate. The tract contains about 10 acres and is assessed on a valuation of $17,500. Soderlund will commence work shortly on the erection of several two-family houses. G. M. Weed and G. B. Robinson, executors of the estate, were the grantors. John T. Burns & Sons, Inc., were the brokers.

HERE'S ANOTHER BATCH OF REAL ESTATE REPLIES

Queries From All Parts of New England Reach American's Real Estate Information Bureau.

Address all questions to the Real Estate Information Bureau, Boston AMERICAN. Questions should be plainly written on only one side of the paper. Full name and address of the inquirer must appear, or the questions will be disregarded. Place on the inquiry a letter and number under which look for a reply. While using every endeavor to be accurate, the AMERICAN does not guarantee, nor will it be held responsible for the accuracy of its replies. Where realty outside the State is involved answers may be subject to delay of one or two weeks.

R.—123—There are nineteen building and loan associations, which in New Hampshire correspond to co-operative banks in Massachusetts. These banks are conducted under the supervision of the Board of Bank Commissioners. There are banks in the following towns and cities: Berlin, Claremont, Concord, Dover, Exeter, Franklin, Gorham, Nashua, Penacook, Laconia, Manchester, Milford, Nashua, Rochester, Portsmouth and Rumford. The banks, except in one or two instances, bear the same names as the cities or towns in which they are located.

H. W. C.—No improvements have been made on the property in question within a year. Nor is it likely, judging from the present outlook, that any will be made within a similar length of time. This will hold up indefinitely building activity on the property and considerably reduce its value for investment or residential purposes.

J. M.—The company about which you inquire is and has been engaged in selling Long Island, N. Y., lots. Little is known about its financial condition. It would be inadvisable to purchase any property from them without first personally viewing the property and then having the title examined by a competent attorney.

No. 33—D—The assessed valuation of the property in question is $4,100. This includes a large house, barn, outhouses and twenty acres of land. The property is one and one-half miles from Norwood and about three miles from Dedham Centre. A price close to the assessed valuation would be a fair figure to pay for the property. The soil is sandy and would be more suitable for chicken-raising than farming.

Height—495 feet.
Foundations—100 feet below curb.
Size of tower—85 feet by 75 feet.
Size of lower stories—75 feet by 136 feet.
Cost (approximate)—$1,800,000.

F. M.—Your property is now valued by the Board of Assessors at $200, which is close to its market value. The lots adjacent to the property have already been filled in, and it is quite likely that its value will increase at a greater rate during the next ten years than in the previous decade.

F. R.—You do not locate the land with sufficient accuracy to enable us to answer your question. There are a number of large ponds which are called by some small lakes within the town limits. Land in Norfolk, however, land is quite high near most of the ponds. The "Great Marshes" are located in the northern part of the town near the shore.

MRS. J. H. T.—It is sufficient, if not unreasonable, to designate any suburb of Boston as being the best for real estate investment, for every suburb there are any number of properties which would be fortunate buys at present. All suburbs also have their real estate "lemons."

The one which you inquire has been the scene of considerable building activity and the purchase of property in a good location would constitute a good investment.

H.—Yes—Inventories if there are any taxes due on the property write to the chairman or secretary of the Board of Assessors of the town.

N. 1895—Your complaint is similar to those received about the same concern. They do business along the lines of the James Realty Company, described elsewhere on this page. We would advise you to lay your complaint before the postoffice authorities at once.

Brokers, Owners and Tenants Unite in Praising Renting Guide.

"The American's Renting Guide constitutes the heartiest aid which is making the renting machinery this season revolve easily and smoothly."

The characteristic remark from a prominent apartment house agent aptly describes the role which the Guide is filling in the renting of high-class apartments in the Back Bay, Brookline, Allston and other sections of the city.

It is lightening the task of the real estate agent, saving many weary footsteps for the busy housewife, and eliminating many hours of drudgery for apartment house owners over the possibility of the renting season coming to an end with their flats or suites.

The Guide, in which are announcements from the most prominent brokers, builders and apartment house agents in Greater Boston, is handsomely illustrated. It contains many photographs, illuminating floor plans and helpful descriptive matter.

That the helpful service which the Guide renders is being more and more appreciated is indicated by the continued calls for the splendid thirty-two page booklet.

WHERE TO GET GUIDES.

Copies of the Renting Guide may be obtained at the AMERICAN office, No. 80 Summer street, at the down-town office, No. 167 Washington street, or at any one of a number of drug stores in Greater Boston.

Those who cannot call for it in person may have it forwarded to them by mail by sending a postal card to the Circulation Department, No. 80 Summer street.

Because AMERICA readers will find at the top of the page another group of pictures of fine apartments housed in which, judging from present indications, vacancies will be scarce before long.

At the top is the three-story brick and stone apartment house erected and owned by George W. Johnston, the well-known Brookline builder. It is divided into suites of seven and eight rooms, equipped with all the conveniences and devices which have made the apartment house of today so popular. The structure is of the latest type of apartment house construction. The architectural features are marked by a quiet dignity and simplicity.

The apartment house at Nos. 1213-1219 Allston Heights represents a type more in apartment houses. It is built of stucco, [illegible] it is a modification of the [illegible] California type. The structure contains eighteen suites of four rooms and bath each. Rentals are from $20 to $27 per month. It is one of the few structures in Greater Boston provided with a [illegible] Winslow A. Dunne, the Allston broker, is agent.

FIVE-STORY STRUCTURE.

Nos. 1298 to 1302 Commonwealth avenue, Allston, owned and managed by R. Levine & Bro., is a stately structure built of face brick and Indiana limestone—five stories in height. The building contains eighty light housekeeping suites ranging from one to four rooms each. Rentals are from $20 to $43 per month.

Trinity Court, which is managed by Cabot, Cabot & Forbes, is a distinctive five-story building of the colonial type of architecture. It is one of the largest and best-equipped apartment houses in the Back Bay. There are 112 suites ranging from one to four rooms each. The building is specially protected against fire.

Brisk Demand for Waverley Oaks Lots

Continued demand for lots on the Waverley Oaks terrace tract is reported by J. W. Wilbur, who is developing the property. Since Labor Day close to one hundred lots have been sold. The lots are carefully restricted, and the streets are built according to grades accepted and approved by the city engineers.

SELL WATERTOWN ESTATE.

A. Bacon is the purchaser of the G. P. Smith estate on Watertown street, Newtonville, consisting of a seven-room house, stable and 9,100 square feet of land, being a total assessed valuation of $13,500. George Stapleo was the grantor. The broker was John T. Burns.

Beautiful Estate of H. H. Rogers to Be Cut Into House Lots

NEW BEDFORD, Sept. 19—The beautiful estate of the late Henry H. Rogers, the financier, is to be cut up in house lots and the actual work of demolishing the buildings, which for years have been landmarks to travelers, was begun this week.

The death of the former Standard Oil ruler, the Rogers family has practically discarded Fairhaven. The big house, which for years was the home of the Rogers' children, has been closed and only at rare intervals has a member of the family set foot in the beautiful town which H. H. Rogers built and loved so well.

A year ago, most of the furniture was removed to the Rogers summer home at Southampton, Long Island, and folks then knew that it was only a question of months, when the fine old mansion, with its stately Corinthian columns and ornate gables would be torn down.

Report Sale of Two Brookline Houses

William E. McCoy & Company have sold for Charles E. Lauriat the properties at No. 86—88 Harvard avenue, Brookline, comprising two single-family brick dwellings and 7,365 square feet of land, assessed on a valuation of $15,000. William L. Roberts was the purchaser.

The same firm has also sold to Joseph W. Cowles the estate at No. 121 Thorndike street, Brookline, comprising a single-family frame dwelling and 6,000 square feet of land, all assessed on a valuation of $9,200. Muriel V. D'Arcy of Brookline was the grantor.

Brookline Home Design Prepared

Plans have been prepared by Architect Harry M. Ramsay for a single family dwelling and garage to be constructed for Saul Wise on Windsor road, Brookline. The dwelling will be built of terra cotta hollow tiles with a cement surface. The architecture will be of the mission type. Plans call for a structure forty by thirty-five feet.

Plan New Somerville Hospital Addition

Contract for an addition to the Somerville Hospital on Crocker street, Somerville, has been awarded, and work on the additions will begin. The additions will comprise two one-story structures, adjoining the operating and X-ray rooms. Plans for the addition have been prepared by Samuel D. Kelley, architect.

AWARD PEABODY CONTRACT

Contracts to build the twenty-room and bath house at the J. H. Thomas Hospital, Peabody, have been awarded to the E. H. Porter Company of that town for $87,494.

RUSH WORK FOR SUBWAY OPENING

Commuters Eagerly Await Opening of New Tube, to Take Place Within Two Weeks.

Commuters who travel back and forth from Brookline, Allston, Brighton and the Newtons are eagerly awaiting the opening of the new Lake street subway, which, according to Boston Elevated officials will take place within the course of the next two weeks.

The minor details remain to be completed before Boston's new subway will be ready to be placed at the disposal of the public.

While installing the modern subway, which is to permit of high-speed cars passing through the system of tubes, is nearing completion. Signals are placed at intervals from the Commonwealth avenue entrance to the junction of the old and new subways under Charles street.

These signals are set up at posts depending upon the curves and grades of the lines. The appearance of these signals is [illegible] those in use [illegible] in the tunnels, the subway signals having been [illegible] twelve inches. They have been arranged so that only one car may pass over the switches on either rail at one time.

Besides the installation of the signal system, there remain many details to be attended to in and about the "Copley" and "Massachusetts" stations. This consists of the fixing of exits and entrances, lighting and the clearing away of debris.

DIFFERENT IN APPEARANCE

The new subway is somewhat different in appearance from any previous unit of the system, in that its roof is flat with rounded corners. The glass in the appearance of a long conductor. Through much of its length it is built in two single "barrels," separated by a wall through which openings large enough for a man to pass are cut at intervals. Through the remainder of the distance it is a single large "barrel" with the same flat roof.

Each of the stations has two platforms, opposite, and on the outside of the tracks. The idea of having an individual color scheme in the surroundings of each station has been followed out in this case, as orange is the Washington street tunnel. In the "Copley" station the [illegible] mirrings are in blue, while in the "Massachusetts" station they are in maroon.

The "Copley" station has two passageways to Dartmouth street from the western platform of the line, a passageway from the eastbound platform, coming out on Boylston street, and a stairway.

At the "Massachusetts" station there will be a lobby on Massachusetts avenue, reaching both platforms by passageways, and a similar passageway to both platforms from Boylston street.

WABAN DWELLING SOLD.

The sale is reported of the estate at No. 202 Windsor road, Waban, comprising a twelve-room house, stable and acre of land, having an assessed valuation of $16,000. Title was taken by Charles I. Dewitt from Mrs. M. Elmer. John T. Burns & Sons, Inc., were the brokers.

CHARGE $25,000 LOT FRAUD TO NEW YORK MAN

WOMAN PARTNER IS TAKEN

NEW YORK, September 19.—James Bottenus, president of the James Realty Company, is held in $3,000 bail, charged by postoffice officials with using the mails to defraud investors in home-site lots. He is alleged to have made a profit in excess of $25,000 by selling "improved city lots in swamps and wild land in the Watchung mountains, New Jersey.

His alleged accomplice, Mrs. Rose [illegible], was held in $2,000 bail in Indianapolis [illegible] hearing on September [illegible] United States Commissioner [illegible] Fort Wayne, relative to her connection with this city.

The method of operation of Bottenus is [illegible] involved the use of the [illegible] puzzle-picture advertisements, [illegible] were published in cities [illegible] ing in New England and the Middle West.

These advertisements appeared in [illegible] publication newspapers. The Boston AMERICAN, one of the newspapers to refuse advertisements for publication, daily refused to print them, as it is a rule of the paper to publish no puzzle-picture advertisements, because of the number of frauds which have been perpetrated through the use of this method of advertising.

SOLD SWAMP LAND.

According to Postoffice Inspectors Barber and Schaffer, Bottenus in 1906 bought forty-acre lots in the Watchung Mountains about five miles between Round Brook and Somerville, N. J., for $200. This property, which consisted of brush, cedar, a thick undergrowth of huckleberries and swamp, was called Round Brook Manor.

It is charged that through agents, newspaper advertisements and booklets, it was represented as fully "improved and provided with all city improvements, such as sewers, water mains, etc. Although he paid only $1.87 per lot, he is alleged to have advertised that the lots were worth $100 each, and actually sold them for $40 to $55 each.

Instead of being adjacent to Somerville, it [illegible] is found to be at least five miles from that town. There are no city improvements. It is alleged, as part of the tract is wild mountain land and the lower sections marshy.

To those two persons who arranged in the nearest manner the figures to make "15," free lots will be given.

ALLEGED PLAN OF BOTTENUS.

After awarding the lots to the successful guessers—and the company awarded lots to all persons who sent in solutions—an agent would call upon the happy lot owners and inform them that since publication of the advertisements the city of Somerville had restricted "Round Brook Manor" and that no building would be allowed on the lot.

In order to be fair the company was willing to sell adjoining lots for $5 down and $5 a month until paid for under signed contract. In this way, it is alleged by postoffice inspectors, the company sold Round Brook Manor's 480 lots for over $23,000.

Bottenus is a former advertising agent. He was indicted before the United States Grand Jury at Houghton.

Mrs. Black was a saleswoman employed by the representation she made [illegible] of the value of the lots are alleged to have exceeded in extravagance those made by Bottenus. She has been employed by the company for three months. She is also charged with using the mails to defraud.

Begin Development of W. Roxbury Tract

A tract of land in West Roxbury, bounded on [illegible] Cass and Summer streets, has been cut up into house lots and placed on the market by the [illegible] Realty Trust. The tract has a frontage of 1,500 feet on the [illegible] Cass and Summer streets, and a depth of [illegible] feet. The Charles River [illegible] frame construction [illegible] and sleeping accommodations for [illegible] candidate have been installed.

Prepare Plans for Somerville Stores

Plans have been prepared for six stores to be constructed at the corner of Clarendon street and Broadway, Somerville, by Antonio Viano. They will be of brick construction and will be one-story high. The stores will measure 101 feet by fifty feet and will cost, it is estimated, $12,000.

Begin Work on Four Medford Dwellings

Work has been commenced on four dwellings to be constructed for John P. Nevers on Harvard street, Medford. The buildings, which will be of frame construction, will be three stories high. They will measure 26 by 30 feet. The cost is estimated at $11,000.

WONDERFUL DOMESTIC SCIENCE AND PURE FOOD EXPOSITION FOR BOSTONIANS NEXT MONTH

Cuba to Present Great Exhibit; U. S., State and City to Offer Displays; "Woman's Realm" to Be a Big Feature.

When Albert R. Rogers tells you all they expect to show next month in Mechanics building, and you note that the Exposition will be open daily from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m., you just begin vaguely to wonder how a fellow is going to get it all.

For, like Ik Marvel, who heard "Al Rogers tell about the story we've been reading," the author of Thomas and Jerome, Jessie the Jolly Jester, Jumpers, Jingles and Jam, has a capacity to be a wonderful man.

As started out to be the Fall Fair of the Boston Retail Grocers Association, but it's a bigger thing than that. It's a kingly exhibit, Edward Lowe and Postmaster Rogers (and we're for both the other as candidates for Governor at today the Chief has become an "Also Ran," which will place on view

CUBAN EXHIBIT.

The largest exhibit ever made in the United States by the Republic of Cuba, an exhibit collected with the very full consent of President Marion G. Monocal.

An exhibit of pure foods, every one of them known and up to the high standard established by the World's Fair at Ghent, under the supervision of Professor Lewis B. Allyn.

Exhibits by the state department of agriculture, which Dean Samuel Walker, for the Bay State, is now boosting for all he's worth.

City of Boston exhibits gathered by the direction of Mayor Curley and showing up to the hilt what is established by the World's Fair to be done under the supervision of Inspector Lewis B. Allyn.

Exhibits by the state department of agriculture, which Dean Samuel Walker, for the Bay State, is now boosting for all he's worth.

City of Boston exhibits gathered by the direction of Mayor Curley and showing up to the hilt what the city gets its dollars and where they go to.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts exhibits, including, perhaps, a running demonstration by Mr. Sweetser of the fur seal and the Pribyloff Islands.

"What Mr. Mowry, the American Real Estate Secretary through the efforts of Mr. Mutel Taylor is doing

An exhibit by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., including, it is hoped, one under your hat, a model of the new invention by the Wizard of Menlo Park which would revolutionize exposition management knows absolutely nothing about.

Domestic Science features—an entire floor of them under the auspices and management of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs. The feature, a series of booths in an enclosed area to be known as "The Woman's Realm."

In Paul Revere Hall, daily from 4 to 6 p. m. cooking lectures by Miss Emma Hanks, also of Wisconsin, a graduate of the Pratt Institute of Brooklyn, N. Y.

MORTALLY HIGH SPOTS.

Looking back over which somewhat considerable list one is somewhat mortified to find that he has succeed in merely touching the elevate spots of the high places in Grand Exhibitology. Commissioner Rogers on vacation has been busy in Mechanics Building, while Mr. Rogers at the same time answered a few dozen telephone calls, dictated letters, talked with an occasional caller or two and otherwise acted as a gentleman indeed in the modern school of Efficiency.

The Exposition opens at 10 o'clock two weeks from tomorrow morning. That will be Sunday, October 4. It will continue for four weeks, closing on Saturday, October 31 at 10 p. m. So much work is being put in preliminaries that the great show is expected to move like clockwork.

Governor Walsh and Mayor Curley have hesitated at nothing to help the grocers and the Women's Federation. Both the Governor and the Mayor are down for five-minute talks at 8 o'clock on the opening night. The Governor helped to interest Uncle Sam in the enterprise. The Mayor moved Uncle Sam to lend a hand, and Mr. Curley stirred the city departments to such an extent that you just want to learn a lot of things about what Boston is doing for us. You would better prepare a date right now to take the Missus and the young'uns to Mechanics Building.

SHE KNOWS ALL ABOUT DOMESTIC SCIENCE AND COOKING

Miss Emma Hanks, who will deliver lectures at the Exposition.

Now let Mr. Rogers go on with the story, said the Educational Commissioner.

"A year and a half ago what the Retail Grocers had in mind was another Fair. Then they decided on a big, first, pure food show ever held in Boston.

"The State Federation of Women's Clubs decided to cooperate, 263 clubs with 57,246 members, and by that time the scope of the proposition had grown to such an extent that we commenced a Big Feature, an unusual attraction.

"We found it in the Republic of Cuba.

"I went to Havana fortified by letters from Governor Walsh, Mayor Curley and the officers of commercial organizations and was received by President Menocal in a manner that took my breath away.

"The President told me that New Englanders have invested $50,000,000 in Cuba, the greater part of it in the last five years. In every way he gave me to understand that Cuba cannot do too much for New England.

"Well, he is giving us the Municipal Band of sixty pieces. We are also to show a Cuban plantation, a great collection of citrus-bearing trees, a Cuban home, and, in one word, a Cuban fair within our own fair.

UNCLE SAM'S EXHIBIT.

"When the Mayor sent me off to Washington with a letter to Congressman Peters, Mr. Peters rounded up the other Bay State Congressmen and the United States departments were opened to me. The government exhibit will show what the United States is doing for the people. Thousands of others are taking advantage of how government readiness to be of help. Millions do not know what they can have from Washington for the asking.

"Departments of the city of Boston will open the eyes of Bostonians who have been their lives long. Captain Dillon of the Park Department will make the basement floor a bower of beauty. A feature of the park exhibit will be a great 'Seal of the City' in flowers.

"Model playgrounds will be set up. There will be daily gymnastics by girls.

"The Health Department will stage a set of Infant Relief exhibit. For the Grocers' Store, half of it could be fun, a moment, half, needs, no other half will suffice. A park, half of it well kept, the other objectionable.

"We expect a couple or two from the Zoo and Curator Benson promises to send us something from the Aquarium.

"In a space 20x50 feet the Red Cross Society will show a battlefield, with nurses, doctors and wounded soldiers.

"The main floor—with the exception of the stage, to be occupied by Edison exhibits—will be devoted to Pure Foods. No goods will be accepted or exhibited here which have not received the O. K. of Professor Allyn of Westfield. Such an exhibit, on one great floor, should bring to Mechanics Building in October every housewife in Northern New England.

"The second floor will be 'Domestic Science.' In a word, everything affecting home welfare, the bringing up of children, cooking, housekeeping and the Woman's Realm.

"Woman's Realm will be a series of ten booths

"Baby, Child, Miss, Bride, Mother, Grading, Widow, Bachelor Girl, Nurse, Maid.

"Eileen J. Rowe, director-in-chief is a business man in South Market street. In 1907, Mr. Rowe managed the New England Food Fair. Since then he has guided not only the Boston shows but similar exhibitions in Worcester, Providence, New Haven, Manchester, Lowell and Portland.

BUSINESS REVIVAL SIGNS.

There are a number of signs that business is reviving this side of the Atlantic. It is believed that before long there will be normal conditions and later on a boom is indicated for many lines. Money is a little easier and it is less difficult to collect what is due with the market for commercial paper in better. Late in the week the National Shawmut Bank purchased $1,000,000 of the largest transaction of this sort by a New England bank in about two months. Foreign exchange has been erratic of late and is still a problem. The demand for exchange is now said to exceed the supply. The situation may be materially improved if foreign subscriptions to the city of New York's $100,000,000 loan are for as large a proportion of the issue as expected. It is thought they may total $40,000,000. The increased movement in finance and commerce is encouraging. London bankers are showing more disposition to discount American bills. It is understood that the city of New York loan is largely oversubscribed. The notes are wanted all over this country and the foreign demand is regarded as significant of confidence in American securities which may prevent such extensive liquidation of the latter from abroad when stock markets reopen, as has been feared.

In more quarters it is believed that the rates are bringing out a great deal of money which has been hoarded. Another ... from that there is ... settlement in the ... wide inquiry ... by dealers in bonds. Now in New York needs have been fi... it is said ... if bankers form a pool to care for the European ... usefulness of a country it would ... be necessary to guarantee more ... than $100,000,000. The proposed ... was $150,000,000. It is understood that the Federal Reserve Board ... virtually approved of a pool for $100,000,000.

RAILROADS A BIG FACTOR.

There is more hope that the Interstate Commerce Commission will grant the plea of Eastern railroads for a 5 per cent increase in freight rates. A rehearing will be held. It is claimed if the railroads are permitted to increase their revenue it will promote such extensive buying of supplies on their part as to give a great impetus to many industries, as well as aid in restoring confidence on the part of investors in the securities of the carriers. It has been difficult, with net earnings decreasing and operating costs going up, for roads to obtain money for equipment or other needs except at very high interest rates. Financiers say railroads are as much in need of a chance to making a living profit of operating trains as workmen are of having jobs that pay them a living wage.

Foreign buying of grains has continued large, shipments of wheat and flour for the week being equal to those reported by Bradstreet to have totalled ... 000 bushels, or 270,000 more than the previous one. Such exports ... July 1 have been about 15 ... bushels in excess of shipments ... the corresponding period a year ago.

BANK CLEARINGS DECREASE.

As to figures indicating what business has been like in this country recently it is interesting to note that clearing house returns to the Financial Chronicle for the week ending September 18 total $2,347,425,846, against $3,276,237,282 last year a decrease of 28.4 per cent. Boston clearings are estimated at $97,957,871 compared with $115,779,935 for the corresponding 1913 week. The News Bureau estimates that Boston banks have taken out not less than $12,000,000 clearing house certificates, and if what they obtained last week is tallied about $2,500,000.

The New York bank statement shows a cash deficit for the week of $38,284,100, an increase of $4,319,100. Loans increased $67,285,000 and net deposits increased $43,342,100.

'BUY A BALE OF COTTON' MOVE GAINING DAILY

Active Demand Has Stirred Up Great Wave of Optimism in the South.

The "Buy a bale of Cotton" movement inspired by Mr Hearst in an Editorial is exciting impetus daily. Yesterday ten merchants called at the AMERICAN office at No. 5 Winthrop Square and purchased three bales.

Secretary Thomas F Anderson of the New England Shoe and Leather Association has been advised by the Thomas G. Plant Company that it has so far purchased 10,000 bales of cotton direct from Southern growers. The association invites all shoe manufacturers to join the "Buy a Bale of Cotton" movement.

The Quakers Oats Company notifies the AMERICAN that it has instructed the managers of all its Southern sales offices, also all its travelling men and all its brokers to buy a bale of cotton on the Quaker Oats company's account.

John N. Willys, president of the Overland Automobile Company, wires the AMERICAN from Toledo, O., that he has purchased a bale of cotton for each of his 40 Overland dealers in the South and that he intends to purchase an additional bale for each Overland car purchased during the next month ending Nov. 17.

The Boston News Bureau yesterday made this editorial comment on the "Buy-a-Bale-of-Cotton" movement:

"Without going into the ethical or economic complexities and ramifications of the 'buy-a-bale-of-cotton' movement, certain it is that the movement thus far has created a wonderful change, at least so far as the South is concerned. Southern pessimism of a few weeks ago, because of the spring outlook confronting the farmers of the promised 15,000,000 bale cotton crop, has suddenly been replaced by an air of optimism and confidence.

"Nobody dares hazard an estimate as to the amount of cotton the movement will absorb. No one knows, or has any idea, how many bales at 10 cents a pound have been purchased by virtue of this scheme.

"The southern banks are now better supplied with cash and are loaning generously on cotton, storekeepers are accepting cotton at ten cents a pound in payment of foodstuffs and merchandise and Secretary McAdoo has made it plain that cotton, where properly warehoused and insured, will be considered as an available bank asset at its fair market value. The factor is not wholly confined to necessities of life, as tuition being rated where a college is willing cotton as payment for tuition.

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that entirely and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation. If you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 1474 Hazelton Avenue, Manhasset, N. Y. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

100% Dividends in 90 Days Possible

Only 3,000,000 Shares at 1c. Per Share

Stock Advances to 2 Cents Per Share Saturday, Oct. 10

Big Dividends Expected On or Before Nov. 1, 1914

Wonderful production on our property has made it necessary to advance price of stock. We feel this stock is now intrinsically worth 10 cents a share. This is ten times what it is now quoted for. On October 10, therefore, the price will go up to 2 cents a share. Investors who come in now can take advantage of this increase in value. See your stock double in value in thirty days.

What is responsible for this advance? A REAL INCREASE IN VALUES. This big, rich, young company is rapidly becoming a giant in oil production. During the month of August we have drilled in NO LESS THAN FOUR PRODUCING WELLS. Think of that. This company has now EIGHT PRODUCING WELLS. We have never drilled a dry hole.

The price of gasoline HAS GOT TO GO UP. It's worth nearly $2.00 a gallon in Europe just now. Oil prices are at their lowest level. Now is the time to make your fortune in this wonderful industry. Buy at the bottom and sell at the top. Get in when prices are low. Use foresight and make money.

We are going to take advantage of these conditions. We have money now in the treasury ready to be applied in dividends. We have been delivering oil to the Standard Oil Company refineries, and at any moment we can cash our vouchers on them FOR ENOUGH TO DECLARE A DIVIDEND.

We are drilling wells as fast as men and money can do it.

8 Producing Wells Now--Big Deal About to Be Closed

Twenty wells, producing 20 barrels per day, would produce 400 barrels of oil, and at the present price would be $300 per day, $27,000 in 90 days. This would pay to the stockholders a dividend of more than 100 per cent. on their investment in 90 days. Greater production is both probable and possible, with bigger dividends altogether possible.

The most extreme low estimate possible to be placed on this stuff will pay $100 for every $100 invested in the company within one year's time. Twenty wells, producing five barrels per day, will produce $75 worth of oil per day, or $27,375 each year, and continue for years to come. The wells producing which surround this property are making from three to ten barrels per day, and most of them have been on the pump for seven or eight years.

HYDE PARK DEMANDS IMPROVEMENTS EQUAL TO OTHER CITY WARDS

Citizens Declare Latest Acquisition to Boston Is Not Getting Square Deal and Was Better Off as a Town; Glowing Promises Unfulfilled.

Hyde Park is up in arms.

The district is in crying need of improvements, many of which affect public health and safety.

Citizens are dissatisfied and aroused. They say they think their community is getting a square deal. They are too tired and too polite to use the word "discrimination," but that is in its baldest sense, is what their plaints express.

Members of the Hyde Park Business Men's Association declare that Ward 26, the latest acquisition of Boston, is not getting its equitable share of the benefits that big and wealthy Boston is handing around to the other wards.

GLOWING PROMISES UNFULFILLED

They say glowing promises were made by the city government on the eve of annexation but that not a single one of them has been fulfilled.

WANTS LOWER RATE

Reduction of $1.15 to $1.00.

Five-cent car fare to Boston.

Public bath.

A new Arboretum.

Widening of Hyde Park avenue.

Better sidewalks.

Better thoroughfares.

A cross walk in front of the postoffice.

New sidewalks, at least on main thoroughfares.

HYDE PARK CITIZENS SIGN THIS PETITION

Do you live in Hyde Park?

If so, cut out this petition and forward it at once to Mayor Curley.

If you are a voter all the better, but don't forget that every man, woman and child who lives in the new ward of Boston is vitally interested in improvements for which there is crying need.

Therefore, every Hyde Parkite has a right to join in the demand for the betterment of their district. Many of the improvements directly affect public health and safety.

There isn't any doubt that Hyde Park isn't getting its equitable share of the good things that Boston is rich enough to bestow AND WHICH BOSTON IS BESTOWING ON THE OTHERS OF ITS TWENTY FIVE WARDS.

Here's this petition:

HYDE PARK BETTERMENT PETITION.

As a resident of Hyde Park, I respectfully request that you, as Mayor of Boston, exercise your official influence to provide Hyde Park with the following improvements:

Eighty-cent gas.

Five-cent fare to Boston.

A larger police force.

More playgrounds.

Public baths

A cross walk in front of the postoffice.

BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION HAS BEEN RIGHT ON THE JOB

Nor are the things that are lacking due to any want of civic pride or activity. The Business Men's Association and other organizations have been very much on the job, but have received nothing better than nonproductive promises. Special delegations and committees have conferred with the City and State authorities, but never a improvement sought is still to fire.

In the charge have been in the front rank in the fight for better gas, and the Hon. Current Event Club, of which Mr. Robert A. Faulkner, Of No. 6 Westminster street, is president, has been an important factor.

Said President Francis W. Pilling of the Hyde Park Business Men's Association:

"If Hyde Park had remained a town it would be immeasurably better off today than as a ward of Boston. For one thing we would now have a new town building and police station. The plans were approved and everything was ready for the new central building when the matter of annexation came up.

PROMISED US EVERYTHING.

"The town plan was to erect a building on River street which would cost about $60,000. The actual cost $10,000. Mayor Fitzgerald and the members of the Council attended our town meeting after the other got up and promised us everything we could ask.

"We have petitioned the Legislature and I believe that matter is to be considered by a commission. If not, it is to be taken up at once.

"It seems to me that the ought, as a whole, to ... fare to Boston ... a well as the ... Dunton ... than ... mile limit as we are.

Other members of the Business Men's Association expressed views similar to President Pilling's. Secretary Boynton: They told how easily bathing in Hyde Park is in reach.

Harvard Cuts Out All 'Club Running'

New Plan Helps to Keep Freshmen a Social Unit.

The Harvard class of 1918 will be free from the influence of "club runners" this year, for an agreement has been entered into between eleven of the university clubs that they will not approach students and solicit membership until the sophomore year.

This agreement automatically eradicates the four freshman clubs, the Iroquois, Kalumet, Phoenix and Sphinx. The final clubs in the agreement are A. D., Delphic, Digamma, Fly, Owl, Porcellian and Spee.

The clubs' resolution came as a result of the establishment of the freshman dormitories and is a genuine attempt on their parts to assist President Lowell in his determination that the freshman class shall be a social unit.

Cleopatra a Virtuous High-Minded Queen!

Astonishing Rehabilitation of "The Serpent of Old Nile" by Egypt's Inspector-General of Antiquities.

By Professor Thomas Whittemore.
The Distinguished American Egyptologist.

CLEOPATRA at last emerges from the shadows that for centuries have clouded her name. Mr. Arthur Weigall, the Inspector-General of Antiquities of Egypt, has given us in his monograph for scholars, "The Life and Times of Cleopatra," an almost entirely new thought of the most interesting queen of ancient times.

The generally accepted estimate of Cleopatra's character, he finds, was placed before the world by those who sided against her in the quarrel between the Roman world and Antony and Cleopatra.

According to the accepted view of historians, both ancient and modern, Caesar is supposed to have been led astray by the voluptuous Egyptian, and to have been detained in Alexandria against his better judgement.

But at the time of Caesar's coming to Egypt, it is now made plain, Cleopatra was actually an unmarried girl of twenty-one years, against whose moral character not one shred of evidence can be advanced. Caesar himself was an elderly man, whose reputation was past belief.

"He was the inevitable co-respondent in every fashionable divorce," writes Omar, "and when we look at the list of the ladies whose names are united with his we can only wonder at the state of society in Rome which permitted him to survive unscathed to middle age." How any one can attribute any blame to Cleopatra for corrupting Caesar is incomprehensible under the records.

A wonderful bust, positively identified, now gives us the real Cleopatra. A distinguished face, large, brilliant eyes, widely spaced, giving the appearance of their vision, and a mouth of great sensitiveness communicating the vision. Her hair appears to have been red. Her face possessed nothing of the faultlessness that characterized Octavia's features.

Dion Caselus says: "She was splendid to hear and see." She was probably small in stature, because it is related that on one occasion, in order to enter her palace unobserved, she commanded herself to be rolled up in some bedding and carried over the shoulders of an attendant through the gates.

Her real power, it has been discovered, lay in her voice. There lay all the siren in her. Familiarity with her, says Plutarch, had an irresistible charm. Her grace of manner, her alluring voice, her wit, were all part of her beauty, subtle and indefinable, elusive and overwhelming. Pliny and Cicero speak of her as being disdainful, but this quality she may have assumed in self-defense among her enemies at Rome.

She was a gifted woman. She could turn her tongue, Plutarch says, like a many-stringed instrument, to any language that she pleased. She seldom needed an interpreter.

Tenacity of purpose was her prevailing characteristic, and an unwavering struggle for her rights and those of her son, Caesarion, constituted her life.

It has been supposed that Cleopatra was, as Josephus words it, a slave to her lusts. Sensuality and the voluptuousness of the East have been supposed to find complete expression in her. It is asserted now that this estimate of her character is only the ignorant one taken of her by her Roman enemies. She was neither a Delilah nor a Jezebel.

In an age when legal rights of marriage were violated on every side, when all Rome was involved in domestic intrigue, Cleopatra, as Mr. Weigall finds, confined her affections to two men—Caesar and Antony—whom in sequence she loved and whose legitimate wife, in the eyes of Egyptian law, she became.

There is not a particle of evidence to show that Cleopatra carried on a single love affair other than the two recorded in history, nor is there any evidence that in those two affairs she conducted herself in anything but a discreet manner.

Her linguistic power indicates that she was studious. She persuaded Antony to prevent the library of Pergamon, which contained over 200,000 volumes, to Alexandria, and Cicero seems to record the fact that she interested herself in getting books for him in Egypt. She was a patron of science.

As to the charges against her of cruelty, it must be admitted that she caused the assassination of her sister, Arsinoe, and permitted the execution of others who were plotting against her. The death of her brother, Ptolemy XV., is attributed as much to Caesar as to herself, if, indeed, he did not die a natural death. The only remaining charge is that she tried the efficacy of poisons upon condemned criminals, to whom it may be said a speedy death was not unwelcome.

Cleopatra was not more cruel than Elizabeth of England. She lived in a ruthless age, and when we recall the cruelty of other members of her family her behavior seems tolerant.

The Only Actual Likeness of Cleopatra. A Recently Discovered Bust Positively Identified as That of the Great Queen, and Now at the British Museum.

Cleopatra Poisoning Her Slaves. The Wonderful Painting by A. Cabanel, the Famous French Artist, Showing the Queen at One of Her Traditional Amusements.

Caesar and Cleopatra seem from the outset to have been much attached to each other. Caesar was in holiday mood, and the life of the palace at Alexandria following his ten years of campaigning in Gaul, was of the gayest. He became deeply interested in Egypt.

At Cleopatra's wish he was allowing himself to be recognized as her divine consort. Cleopatra was a keen patriot, and deeply interested in the advance of her dynasty. She knew that the man she loved and who loved her might at any moment become actual sovereign of Rome. For years her fear had been of Rome, but now she saw suddenly a possibility of Egypt becoming an equal of Rome in the new empire of the world. All historians admit that Cleopatra was a woman of great mental power; she was showing it now.

Little by little, under the influence of Cleopatra, Caesar was creating his schemes for a world empire. Caesar waited in Egypt until the birth of the child. To his great joy it proved to be a son. The boy was called Caesar, or Caesarion, and was accepted at once by the Egyptians as the legitimate child of their queen and of the god Amon. The overjoyed dictator remained no longer in Egypt but returned at once to Rome.

Within a year Cleopatra was summoned by him to Rome to witness his triumph.

The eyes of historians have been directed too much on Cleopatra in the Alexandrian palace and too little in the Roman villa, where Caesar in these days constantly sought her advice. Cleopatra's younger brother, whom she had brought with her from Alexandria, now passes from history, and Caesarion, her son, becomes the uncrowned King of Egypt.

However, the latent ill feeling toward Caesar was publicly manifesting itself. He was charged with modeling his future throne upon that of the Ptolemies and shaping his dynasty on the Ptolemaic plan. Imagine Cleopatra's grief and consternation at the news of Caesar's assassination! In an instant her ambitions were hurled from their lofty heights. She had not only lost her dearest friend and lover, but the vast kingdom which he had foreseen for her had vanished.

She must at once have consulted Antony, with whom she was doubtless acquainted, for during her residence at Rome the dictator's favorite officer came often to the villa. It is likely he advised her to leave Rome, since there now began to be grave fears of the outbreak of a civil war. It was not improbable, either, that Antony urged her to return to Egypt to raise troops and ships for his own cause.

As she sailed over the Mediterranean back to Egypt her mind must have been besieged by hundreds of plans and schemes for the future. She was no longer the light-hearted girl whom Caesar had first met. She was a keen, brilliant woman, endowed with the fire and pluck of her audacious ancestry, prepared to fight her way with all their inherited unscrupulous energy, to the summit of her ambition for her royal son.

There can be no doubt that Antony himself was anxious to form a solid alliance with Cleopatra, for he needed just such an ally for the schemes he had in mind. Thrilled with hope, Antony prepared to go to Alexandria. The meeting of Antony and Cleopatra on the Cyndus is well known.

Egypt sanctioned her marriage with Antony as it had with Caesar.

There were only two leaders in the Roman world, Octavian and Antony. Octavian was her relentless enemy since Cleopatra's son, Caesarion, was his rival for the dictatorship of the world. When the disconcerting news from Rome and from Syria came of the general advance of Octavian's army, Antony prepared to leave Alexandria. As she watched his sails depart from the great harbor, Cleopatra did not know that she would not see him again for four long years.

In the Autumn, six months after Antony's departure, Cleopatra bore to Antony twins, a boy and a girl, who were named Alexander Helios and Cleopatra Selene. With this event Cleopatra passes from the pages of history until the beginning of the year 36 B. C. With a constant faith in Antony, she seems to have been occupied during these years with the affairs of her own kingdom and with the depressing course of events in the Roman world. Her indignation when the news of Antony's marriage reached her must have been terrible. It was a political marriage, to be sure, but Cleopatra must have felt that Antony was playing a double game.

The decline of Antony's power, as is well known, was rapid, albeit she threw her magnificent energies, with all the fervor of her genius, to sustain him.

She had played her wonderful game for the consolidation of Egypt and Rome into one kingdom, ruled by her descendants, and she had lost. She knew that she would be led in chains up to the capitol, as she had watched her sister, Arsino, led in the triumph of Julius Caesar. She knew that the death of her beloved son was inevitable. Her own death was as regal as her life.

Octavian immediately ordered Caesarion to be executed.

Cleopatra's very memory became the enemy of this new Orientalized Rome, and it is upon this unsound and prejudiced basis that the world's estimate of the queen has rested.

The Princess Hassan (Nee Olga Humphries), Without the Turkish Trappings She Hates and a Few of the More Exciting Episodes in Her Campaign for a Divorce.

Unusual and Still Unsuccessful Efforts of an American Beauty to Rid Herself of a Royal, But Parsimonious Egyptian Husband

A BEAUTIFUL American girl has nearly reached the stage of despair. What can she do to drive her "mean old" Prince husband to divorce?

The Princess Ibrahim Hassan wants to be free. She wants to raise her beautiful head from the yoke of matrimony. Prince Ibrahim Hassan, favorite cousin of the Khedive of Egypt, doesn't. For this reason domestic war was declared, and the campaign began in Cairo has stirred to sorely troubled Paris and continues at this moment on United States soil. It began when the American girl, who had been Olga Humphreys, the actress, protested to her royal husband against wearing the veil of the Oriental woman.

"I won't wear it," said the Princess.

"You will disgrace me by the naked face," responded her Oriental lord in cold scorn. He walked haughtily away, stopping to speak to an old servant on the way. That afternoon Princess Ibrahim found her chamber door locked from the outside.

Reflecting upon this in seclusion, she determined upon strategy, and believing that strategy would be strengthened by a change of base she resumed her veil and her sweetest smiles and, with the art of a houri, induced Prince Ibrahim to consent to a trip to Paris.

In Paris the war spirit awoke in her soul, never more to slumber. The Princess herself tells of this declaration of war. "One evening when my husband had gone to the club I longed to go out and lose myself in the free, laughing crowds of the streets. But I dared not. I did, however, slip down to the writing room. At the desk next mine was a freckle-faced American girl. I glanced at her and smiled. She smiled back. We talked for a quarter of an hour of travel, of books, of the shops and of the theatres, of persons we both knew. The next morning as we were going down in the lift we met her, and I said 'good morning.' My husband demanded when I had met her. I told him. He flew into a rage and ordered me to go to my room, and commanded that I never leave it or speak again without his permission and to no company, I, an American girl!"

The campaign was advancing. The time to strike had come. The Prince on leaving had ordered that the luncheon of Madame the Princess be taken to her room in twenty minutes. Madame the Princess appeared in the public dining room and ordered her luncheon there, quite as coolly as though she had not seen her husband's [illegible], squatting behind the palms that [illegible] musicians, and staring at her with the [illegible] stare.

The phrases fell harshly upon the ears that had listened to her cooings through the yellow chiffon veil in the Palace gardens. But Prince [illegible] made no reply save a still smaller check for "living expenses."

Then the Princess went on the road. "On the road," be it known to those who know not their stage, is a dim land where travelling theatrical companies lose themselves for any time from two weeks to six months. It is a land of ultra democracy. As was evidenced by the volley the warlike Princess sent to Cairo—a snapshot showing her leading a band of good-humored strangers, each carrying a travelling bag along the ties of a railroad track

The New Way of Waging Sea Wars – C

Why This War May Send All Battleships and Leave Only Man-Made Monstrous

By a United States Naval Officer Who Has Just Returned from an Official Inspection of Belgian, French and German Fortifications.

IF this war is to prove whether fortifications, entrenchments and the movements of infantry, artillery and other creeping things are at the mercy of the aeroplane and the giant dirigible, it is also to prove whether the battleship is at the mercy of the submarine, the torpedo and the air crafts.

For centuries war has been waged in much the same way. Boats have met each other on the seas, grappled, fought and sunk each other. Masses of troops have met each other hand to hand on the surface of the earth, have stormed fortifications and have been besieged or har in cities or out of them.

But with this war two great factors have entered the arena. Whether these factors will change battle for all time to come or whether they will sink into relative insignificance is yet to be determined.

All time-honored tactics of land war are threatened by the ships of the air.

All time-honored tactics of sea war are threatened, not only by the ships of the air, but by the ships of the under-seas—the submarines and their deadly auxiliaries, the swift torpedo and the lurking mine.

The sea war, then, is no longer a struggle of boats battling on the surface of the waters. It is a war on, beneath and above the waves. The future of the battleship hangs in the balance, and before this article appears it may already have been decided.

It is the paradox of humanity that man, apparently always laboring constructively, is essentially destructive. He spends his genius in wresting the secrets of nature from her, and then he uses his knowledge to destroy that which he has built up with so much labor. It is a science but he diverts to satisfy this instinct of destruction and not an invention which he does not bend to the purpose of slaughter. It is his faculty to find the weak part of the toys he constructs for the farce he calls civilization, and then with more skilful toys to destroy the weaker through its weakness.

This is the fate that now seems to be facing the costly navies of the world. A ship is, after all, a hybrid product. Man developed it from the floating log that had by chance fallen into the water and which he by chance discovered he could make move through the water. Anon afterward he found he could accelerate this progress by putting up a piece of cloth to catch the wind.

Since that time there has been no real development in ships. The engine and propeller have taken the place of sail and wind, but to all intent and purpose the ship is still the log of the cave man. It is neither of the sea nor of the air. The waters destroy it and the tempests destroy it. Therein lies its weakness.

Man learning this, invented the submarine.

If it is so decided, it is not hard to picture what sea wars of the future will be like. There will be enormous shoals of submarines blockading ports, preventing food and supplies from coming in, turning upon each other and battling like sharks under the surface. Above them will be swarms of aeroplanes striving to destroy the only vulnerable part of the submarine that they can destroy—the periscope, the eyes of the under-water boat, without which it is a blind man seeking to swift destruction.

Underneath the water will be the steel sharks, rending each other; in the air, the airships, each striving to peck out the eyes of the man-made monsters beneath the waves.

On the ocean there will be nothing.

It is the purpose of this article to present briefly these new factors in sea wars and point out what may happen soon.

The submarine is as much a thing of the sea almost as the fish. Just as the aeroplane is becoming as much a thing of the air as the bird.

The submarine is unaffected by tempests, because it can dive down into depths where there is no movement of the waves and it can remain under water for fourteen hours continuously. This is accomplished by tanks which can be filled with water and, overcoming what is known as the "margin of buoyancy," submerge the vessel. The air is replenished by special purifying devices and by tanks of oxygen. When the vessel wants to arise it simply pumps out the water from its tanks.

The submarine delivers its attacks unseen, by stealth, and it has a ship in the most vital parts—under water. Mainly it accomplishes this by the use of torpedoes. The torpedo, a diagram of which is shown, is the most deadly, and, it may almost be said, intelligent arm of modern warfare. One torpedo, striking at the right angle of a bow, can destroy the largest ship.

Against the submarine there is no real form of defense. There is only one factor in favor of the ship. The submarine is a slow craft. It is slower than the slowest Battleship when it proceeds under water. When it must surface its speed is doubled. It is then an easy target for the battleship, destroyer and also for the submarine and torpedo boat destroyer. Nets are thrown out as escort when attack is anticipated. There are other effective weapons against it. Some of them are equipped with firing guns, but these are useful only in attacking the on-water craft, such as a pontoon.

The submarine has one great weakness when submerged. That is its periscope, the marvelous eyes through which the submarine sees. A diagram of the periscope is shown on this page. It consists of a slender tubular shaft extending up through the conning tower of the submarine. Each boat is equipped with a pair. At the upper end of the shaft is a mirror lens. Upon this mirror lens is reflected the surrounding surface of the ocean. The image reflected herein is carried down the tube to other lenses and then conveyed to enlarging binoculars. The officer in the conning tower peers into the binoculars and sees just what the peri-

When it is raised to its maximum height every ship within a radius of ten miles is reflected within it. It can be submerged entirely under the surface of the water. But when it is submerged the submarine is blind. The human brain in the conning tower can see nothing.

It must see to attack, and to see it must expose a vital part to the Enemy. It is true that this vital part is only a swiftly moving cylinder about half a foot in diameter.

Nevertheless, the periscope can be hit, and when it is the submarine is ... This was shown at the outbreak of the present war, when the German submarine U15 was destroyed by the British cruiser Birmingham in the North Sea. The U15, with other submarines, made an attack upon the British squadron. A gunner on the Birmingham with his first shot destroyed the periscope. The blinded boat, in confusion, rose for a moment to the surface of the water. A second ...t then tore through the conning tower ... the water rushed in, sending 32 to ... bottom of the sea with all on board. ...t beyond these factors—the superspeed, the protection of torpedo ... and the weakness of the periscope—there is, as has been said, no protection yet devised against the submarine's attacks. There is, of course, a readily defensive measure called the torpedo net. These are meshes of strong steel which are dropped down from the sides of the vessel and are supposed to catch the torpedo before it hits the side of the ship.

In theory the torpedo explodes within the net, and the force of its attack is more or less diminished. As a matter of fact, torpedo nets are not dependable. As I have seen, in my recent trip of inspection, German submarines which are equipped with a formidable device for cutting these nets. This device resembles in one form an enormous pair of ... which cut through the nets like paper. In another form they are ... with powerful tearing arms ... drag the nets away and expose ... of the battleship to the deadly ... from the torpedo tube.

These nets are also in use for barricading harbors against the attacks of submarines. When the harbors are to be barred a strong log boom is first stretched across the entrance. To this boom are attached the steel nets. The wooden booms support them. It is the theory that ships can lie behind these booms and that the submarines cannot get through them. Man's infernal ingenuity, however, has solved this problem easily. A telescopic steel mast has been constructed which can be extended from the front of the submarine. This mast is equipped with a device by which mines containing powerful explosives are swung from the interior of the boat through the water and are placed in position underneath the under-water barricades. The mines are exploded by a time mechanism. When the mines are placed in position the submarine swings away and at the appointed moment the mines explode and destroy the boom. The entrance is then open to attack.

> "The periscope is the eye of the submarine. Peering over the waves, it reflects what it sees into the watching human eye in the conning tower. Destroy it and the submarine is a blind thing, plunging to destruction."

The question of how battleships can be protected against a submarine is one that has troubled naval experts ever since the first under-water boat was made. Admiral Sir Peter Scott, of the British Navy, is one of those who is of the opinion that no real protection can be devised against the under-water attack.

Recently he said to me: "The day of the dreadnought is gone. The submarine has made it archaic. I am satisfied that no fighting ship is safe, day or night, from the attack of the submarine. I believe that the next war will see the end of the building of battleships. After that war there will be nothing but submarines and hydro-aeroplanes."

Sir John H. Biles, the famous English engineer, has suggested that the battleships of the future shall be heavily armored under the water line. This, however, would greatly reduce the speed of the boat and would also greatly reduce their weight carrying. A boat armored heavily enough to withstand a torpedo attack could not carry anything but the lightest guns. I is difficult to see that their usefulness in war would warrant the expense of building them.

A score of submarines can be built for the cost of a cruiser. The crew of a battleship numbers hundreds, while the submarine carries at most twenty men. What does it matter if five or six or a dozen submarines are destroyed in sinking a single ship. The tally of men and money is still far in favor of the under-water killer.

It is for this reason that England's great navy may be found to be worse than useless before the war is over. The Germans are immensely stronger in the number of their submarines and torpedo boats. They are stronger, too, in their great airships and aeroplanes.

I predict that this war will see the doom of the battleship. After it is over there will be no more dreadnoughts and super-dreadnoughts—no floating fortresses with guns that can shoot twenty four miles. The mastery of the seas will be fought for between man-made steel sharks tearing each other apart under the waves; man made vultures of the air battling with each other above the waves and striving to cripple the submarines. On the surface of the seas there will only be the hydro-aeroplanes—things that are as much of the air as the aeroplane, and which only use the sea, like the gulls, in which to dip their feet. If anything else is needed the infernal agencies of man can be depended upon to find it.

The thing that wins is the thing that is most in harmony with its surroundings. Submarine, aeroplane and hydro-aeroplane—each of these is a part of the element in which it works.

The battleship is a hybrid. It is neither one thing nor the other, and so—it must go

Fall Fashions for Americans

("Lucile")

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashion in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

THE war, dreadful as it is, will have its measure of opportunity for America.

There are no fashions now in Paris, nor will there be any this season.

Paris will be again, and Paris fashions will be indispensable, as they always are, when the struggle ends. But in this suspended realization is an opportunity for the American woman. There is no reason why she should not create a national school of fashions while she is free, for a time, of suggestions from the boulevards.

These new models of mine I call American fashions, because they are some of those I designed after the gates of Paris had closed.

Here is a photograph of Miss Ethel Levey, the American actress, in one of the new Fall coats. The broad bands, collar and cuffs are of silver fox. The coat itself is of broadtail, embroidered with Oriental colors.

The tea gown is of three shades of blue and silver. The dress itself is of the palest gray blue. The overdress and scarf are of deep periwinkle embroidered in silver. The whole effect is a wonderful background for the pearls, which form the only jewelry worn.

The evening dress with wrap for early Autumn I am particularly proud of. The dress is of oyster charmeuse, with a belt of velvet which matches the cloak of the same material. The wrap is heavily trimmed with blue-gray fox furs.

The charming little toque is one of the new feather toques which were about to become the rage in Paris. It is made up of the entire body of the green parrot with outspread wings, shot in blue and green. The head of the bird is low at the back of the neck.

This use of the feather toque was one of the signs of a season in which even more brilliant fashions than last season's were to prevail.

Taffeta, by the way, had been granted a further lease of life in black for evening wear, and navy blue for daytime occasions.

More of the specially supple texture, which is now the most necessary quality of every fabric, is also to be noted down among the "survivals," though it will be very frequently just relegated to the lining of coats and cloaks, more especially when it is patterned with stripes in such durinally contrasted colors as sapphire blue, damask rose and emerald green, all gathered together on a black ground. An even more imposing array of colors in Roman stripes on black or dark blue moire grounds will also figure as linings and trimmings—black, cobalt blue, Indian red, beige and pale gold being a typical collection of contrasts.

For though as regards their outer colorings a somewhat subdued scheme of repression may, and will be, the hall-mark of Fashion, we must needs break out into a lot of shadings somewhere, so much have we grown to love brightness during the color orgies of the last two or three seasons.

And so it is that the linings and the sashes and other such additions and details are so designed as to amply satisfy our requirements in this direction, and, what is more, to display themselves in an equally attractive aspect in whatever way they may be arranged.

There is, for instance, one glorious metallic brocade in the brightest sapphire blue, so interwoven with silver as just to show a haunting shimmer every now and again through its clustering roses of dull gold and purple and pink. But, reverse it, and the suggestion becomes a definite and decorative reality, the whole beautiful blue background being covered by a shining meshwork of silver in lace-like design.

Another marvel of design and manufacture which will be quite ideal for a deeply swathed sash is so curiously patterned with broad stripes as to be really almost suggestive of a flag!

And, verily, it is worthy to be adopted and waved aloft as the Flag of Fashion.

For in it black gives place to vivid carnation pink, and this again to mandarin yellow; while, after a dividing line of black, there comes a broad banding of real turquoise blue, a gleam of the green of emeralds being also introduced, and each and every lovely color being so closely interwoven with gold that they shimmer and glow with every movement, till at last there blazes out a great stripe of brilliant gold tinsel which runs the whole length of the fabric across those other stripes which take so many different directions and sometimes form a sort of half square

The Gate That Is Sealed Against the "Prince of Peace"

IF a Holy War results from the present conflict in Europe, one of the principal objects of the Christian nations will be to wrest the Holy City from the possession of the Turks.

One of the most sacred spots in the Holy City is the Golden Gate, located on the east of Jerusalem, and shown in the accompanying illustration.

It was through this Gate that Christ entered Jerusalem riding on an ass over branches strewn in the road by a multitude crying, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!"

Long ago, the Moslems sealed up the Golden Gate, believing that as the Saviour had entered Jerusalem through it before, He would use it again on His return.

In Fuller's "Pisgah Sight of Jerusalem" an interesting account of the Golden Gate is given. After describing other gates on the eastern side of Jerusalem, this well-known writer says:

"Next followeth the Golden Gate (not mentioned in Scripture but merely depending on human authority), so called because gilt all over, vulgar beholders (who carry no touchstones in their eyes) according all massy gold which is richly gilded. Roman authors add, that when our Saviour, in an humble but solemn equipage, rode on an ass colt to the temple, this gate opened unto him of its own accord, a pretty proportionable fiction. For, if the iron gate opened to Peter, a disciple, no less than a Golden Gate could offer entrance to Christ, his Master. Only here's the difference: We receive the one as recorded in Scripture, and refuse the other as not reported therein, especially our Saviour having so fair an occasion to make mention thereof. For when the Pharisees questioned Him for not silencing the children's hosannahs, and when He returned, that 'if they would immediately cry out,' how would immediately cry out," how easy had it been for Him to add that the very walls of the city had already opened their mouths (their gates) to receive Him.

"But whatever doubt there is as to the Golden Gate's opening of its own accord to receive the Master, there is no doubt at all of His entry into Jerusalem was through this portal. Hence, the performance of the Turks in sealing it up.

The Mount of Olives, also seen in the accompanying illustration, has undergone many changes since sacred times. There are a few olive trees there, but they seem out of place, for the hill has long since been encumbered with modern buildings. A Russian tower has been erected in the vicinity of the Golden Gate.

The Garden of Gethsemane looks like some modern adjunct to a country villa. Franciscan fathers have shored up some of the more venerable olive trees, and iron railings and wire netting here and there give the sacred region a pronounced "Please keep off the grass" aspect which is somewhat incongruous.

Describing the new Jerusalem Robert Hichens, the novelist, recently declared: "I see before me various pallors: whites, yellows, yellow grays, yellow browns, pinky reds, pale dust, pale mud, pale puddle, white-faced men in yellow, moving with an air of combined defiance and surreptitious servility along roads that look suburban, between large, light-colored, new houses."

In War's Grip

THE chief work of the world continues to be destruction and murder.

Hundreds of thousands of men are called to the armies to take the place of those killed, wounded or missing.

Farmhouses, villages and cities have been burned.

For every week that the war has lasted there has been spent in cash ENOUGH TO BUILD THE PANAMA CANAL. And in addition to the money spent and the lives and blood wasted there has been a loss of property that can scarcely be calculated.

* * *

Fortunately, however, there is hope in the very earnest and constant talk of peace.

The movement of the human mind is away from the war, toward the peace so ardently hoped for and soon to come. And there is good ground for hope.

The world will see no more "Hundred Years' War," no more "Thirty Years' War," or even "Seven Years' War."

There is no hiding, no slow campaigning

The great guns hurl their bullets over mountain ranges, and death is inflicted upon those that are miles away.

Humanity is now engaged in WHOLESALE murder. And the supply of bodies, bullets, money, strength and courage cannot last as in the old, slower days.

* * *

But it hopes ardently FOR PEACE, knowing that peace will benefit the vanquished as much as the conquerors.

The nations see what they must have known and must have seen, had they not been blindly led, that war means loss to everybody.

It cannot help one nation to burn the city of another or kill the inoffensive citizens of another.

It cannot help one nation to win and impose a heavy tax upon a nation conquered.

There are not enough millions in any one nation available to pay for the harm that war does to another nation.

* * *

This country shares with others the loss and the suffering, although fortunately not the loss in human life, the suffering of mothers who wait to hear of the death of their sons.

We suffer in business, in growth, in peace of mind.

For the war which we did not want, and for which we are not responsible, we must pay in millions and hundreds of millions—although, fortunately, the end of the war and the prosperity that will come will more than repay us.

* * *

The country considers now not only the conditions in Europe, but the conditions here in America, where "the most peaceful nation in the world" must pay for the folly and brutality of others.

The economic situation, the duty of the citizens and of the Government, and the results for this country have been outlined in a careful analysis by W. R. Hearst. We recommend his articles to the thoughtful readers of the Hearst Sunday newspapers, and shall be glad to have their opinion for our information and for publication.

We believe that Mr. Hearst's examination into the effect of injudicious free trade theorizing will interest many millions of Americans in the present crisis.

No good that can come to us from this war can atone for the horror and the suffering inflicted upon other nations. And every American citizen will always regret the needless waste of life, however great the prospecity that may come to ourselves.

There is no doubt that that prosperity will be great. Besides prosperity we shall get from the war a lesson that will be of greater value even than thousands of millions of dollars of added foreign trade. That is the lesson of "judicious protection," the lesson of this war teaching us to employ our own men, keep our markets for ourselves, and do intelligently by legislation what the war is now doing for us.

* * *

"The most peaceful nation in the world is to be asked to pay a war tax of a hundred million dollars. The United States is not at war, and is not in reality a sufferer from the European war.

"The necessity for this tax is not created wholly by the war in Europe, or even mainly by the war.

"The deficit in the income of the United States Government is due partly to the reduction in the amount of the imports into this country, but also largely to a reduction of the tax upon imports into this country.

"The reduction in the amount of the imports the party in power at Washington is not responsible for, but the reduction in the amount of the tax on imports the party in power at Washington is responsible for.

"The reduction in the amount of foreign imports is not a disadvantage. On the contrary, it is in many respects a distinct benefit to our country. The reduction in the amount of income from these imports is obviously a disadvantage, and a distinct disadvantage at this time.

"It would appear, therefore, that the party in power in Washington was not responsible for such benefits as there are in this present situation, but was and is responsible for the disadvantages of the situation.

"Why can not the Democratic party frankly confess that its Free Trade theories are a mistake, have always proved to be a mistake and are now proving to be a mistake?

"Why can not the Democratic party, which has many claims upon popular confidence, abandon the visionary and impractical policies which will, if persisted in, forever deny it popular confidence and support?

* * *

"War or no war, the Democratic party's tariff policies were proving failures.

"Before war in Europe was declared, or even contemplated, the balance of trade was showing immensely against this country. Our export balance had decreased over a quarter of a billion dollars in seven months.

"Gold was being exported in quantity.

"The income tax had proved insufficient to compensate for the reduction in the tariff revenues.

"Foreign goods were coming into our country, perhaps not in sufficient quantities to raise an adequate governmental revenue under the reduced rate of taxation, but certainly in sufficient quantities to deprive our American manufacturers of their home market and our American laborers of employment.

"American men out of employment were parading the streets.

"American factories were closing and discharging their employes, and, instead of America shipping more goods abroad than before the reduction of the tariff, America was importing more and shipping less, with the balance of trade going more and more to our disadvantage.

* * *

"Then comes the European war, and, through no effort or merit of our own, European goods are withheld from our markets and our home markets are again open to our home manufactures.

"Another consequence of this European war is the opening of foreign markets to our products

"Markets which were formerly supplied with goods from England and France and Germany and Austria will not be supplied from those nations, and must be supplied with goods from the United States.

"The advantage of markets is clear and conclusive. Markets are merely the demands for our products. Without the demands there can not be a sustained supply, and with enlarging demands there must ever be enlarging supply, increasing production, increasing employment and increasing prosperity.

"We could have kept our home markets with legitimate protection.

"We could have gotten enlarged foreign markets with judicious reciprocity

"We did neither.

"But what we failed to do for ourselves the war will do for us.

* * *

"Yet, to take full advantage of the opportunities which the European war offers to this neutral nation, those opportunities should be made as permanent as possible by intelligent legislation and diplomatic negotiation.

"If home markets are desirable and advantageous, as they obviously are, let us retain them for American producers by a tariff admittedly for protection.

"If foreign markets are advisable and advantageous, as they clearly and surely are, let us retain them and enlarge them for our American manufacturers by reciprocity treaties.

"A tariff for revenue only has proven to be a tariff for insufficient revenue only.

"A tariff for judicious protection would prove a tariff for sufficient revenue as well

"If a frank policy of judicious protection intelligently coupled with reciprocity were adopted by the Democratic party, the business men of America could proceed confidently and competently to take advantage of their present unexampled opportunities.

"They would know that those opportunities and advantages would not be temporary but permanent.

"They could build factories, not to operate for the period of a war lasting only a few months, but for periods of years, guaranteed by the fostering care of a wise and farseeing government.

"There would then be no need for continual levies of new taxes.

"There would then be no occasion for parades of unemployed or business proceedings in bankruptcy.

"There would then be no need of foreign wars, or such regrettable calamities to others, for us to glean a prosperity which should be naturally our due.

"With our home markets secured through legitimate protection and foreign markets obtained through intelligent reciprocity our production would be immense and our prosperity correspondingly great.

"Then, with a merchant marine to carry our products to all parts of the world and a mighty navy to protect our ships and our shores, America could be in the dominant position which the enterprise and intelligence of its people, if not of its Government, entitle it to hold.

"Why can not the Democratic party abandon its theories which have proved false, its policies which have proved fatal?

"Why can it not cease forever taxing our producers, forever restricting, restraining and retarding our production? Why can it not embark upon a new and enlightened policy of intelligently encouraging our production, of adequately transporting our production and of constantly enlarging and retaining the markets for our production at home and abroad?

A Tribute by the Famous English Essayist to the True Democracy That Enables the Supreme Pontiff to Wield the Greatest Spiritual Power of Any Ruler

By G. K. CHESTERTON

AMONG the many true and touching expressions of respect for the tragedy of [illegible] most have commented on the fact that the Pope was by birth a peasant. Yet this is none, I think, traced that interesting and even tremendous fact further than the truth is that the [illegible] is the only authority in [illegible] which it could have happened [illegible], immeasurably the oldest [illegible] it is the only one that [illegible] comb. In semi-Asiatic [illegible] princes raids and usurpations [illegible] of brigands rather than [illegible] of the pure peasant advancement. This is the only real [illegible] the world; and any [illegible] rected to it.

[illegible] grateful and uncanny about the [illegible] ness of the enlightened. [illegible] and they see not; telepathy [illegible] and they hear not; some [illegible] the mind or the knot of the [illegible] them from being conscious of [illegible] it as palpable and present. I was [illegible] debating club that wars were now [illegible] and out of date, while [illegible] were carrying the ultimatum of [illegible]. I dare say they are saying [illegible] at debating club. And if I were [illegible] modern scientific age has [illegible] above all other ages, the Age of [illegible] would call that plain fact [illegible] has been with the old [illegible] is to-day with the old [illegible] pedigree. It is much [illegible] has ever been before. [illegible] ger than it ought to be.

[illegible] ancient hereditary right. [illegible] elected despots in the [illegible] are very few. Wherever [illegible] has been with the old [illegible] is to-day with the old [illegible] pedigree. It is much [illegible] has ever been before. [illegible] ger than it ought to be.

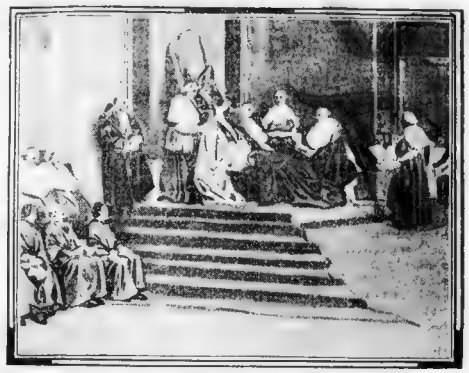
[illegible] ancient hereditary right. [illegible] elected despots in the [illegible] are very few. Wherever [illegible] has been with the old [illegible] is accidental. The [illegible] in the poetic and sporting [illegible] furniture. To prove this [illegible] do no more than allude to the earthly [illegible] circumstances in which we stand [illegible]. Whoever may be right or [illegible] certain that the two central empires now at war are made of many variegated bloods and histories.

And it is quite certain that what holds each confederation together is not a public constitution, but simply a private family. The Austrian Emperor is trying to avenge his heir; and the German Emperor is trying to revive his grandfather. The feeling in both cases at least is not a constitutional sentiment; it is rather the sentiment that blood is thicker than milk. I think myself that the Hapsburgs have been wiser than the Hohenzollerns; understanding more of human nature and of the roots of such dim and despotism. For the House of Prussia depends on good luck; and if it once lost the luck, might lost all the loyalty. But the House of Austria rather points to its bad luck; a [illegible] as did Maria Theresa, to men of many [illegible] races to rally round something [illegible] babe, a woman, or an old man. I [illegible] wonder if the calamities of the Austrian Empire have alone kept it together. In [illegible] case we have a proof of the intense modernity of mere hereditary right. The tribes and [illegible] that could not be kept together by any [illegible] are kept together by a surname. The family is larger than the nation.

But as compared with the case of the [illegible] Pope, the case of republican and "representative" rulers is just as strong. I do not remember that a real peasant has lately been President in France. I am quite positive that a [illegible] workman has not been Prime Minister in England. It must be confessed, I fear, that the longest and slowest of all such ladders of advance is the respectable and highly conservative person called a Labor Member. But how far he has travelled from the average workman! And how far he still is from the average Front Bench Man! In America, I suppose (at least I was told so in my youth) there was such a thing as "From Log Cabin to White House."

As a boy I thought the change of residence a deplorable deterioration in the sense of the picturesque. But, for good or ill, is there any British record "From Cabinet-Maker to Cabinet Minister"? Does any modern politician, however republican, think it natural to imitate Cincinnatus? Does he, at any casual moment, cast aside the paludamentum and go back to the plough? Has he through life the speech and manhood and unmistakable make-up of the class from which he came? Even in high and heroic republics, like those of France and of Switzerland, can one say that the ruler is really the plain man in power?

His Holiness Benedict XV., who Took the Throne Made Vacant by the Death of Pope Pius X., Who Was Originally a Peasant.



The Throne of the Pope Towards Which Any Peasant May Aspire and Reach.

Now all the evidence, from foes as much as friends, attests that this was really true of the great priest who lately gave back to God the most tremendous power in the world. Those who admired him most admired the simplicity and sanity of a peasant. Those who murmured against him most complained of the obstinacy and reluctance of a peasant. But for that very reason it was clear that the oldest representative institution of Europe is working; when all the new ones have broken down. It is still possible to get the strong, patient, humorous type that keeps cheerfulness and charity alive among millions, alive and supreme in an official institution. But I think it would puzzle the parliamentarians and the suffragists, and the other correctors of our complex machine, to tell me where else it has been possible; except in that place.

As has been pointed out, with subtle power and all proper delicacy, in numberless liberal and large-minded journals, the great and good priest now dead had all the prejudices of a peasant. He had a prejudice to the effect that the mystical word "Yes" should be distinguished from the equally unfathomable expression "No." Many travellers wandering in peasant countries have found traces of this belief. Mr. W. B. Yeats, in his most beautiful poem, exactly answers the peasant's instinct for exactitude, for the green arithmetic of ordered fields. "Nine bean rows will I have there."

Many of the merely aristocratic poets, Shelley or Goethe, might have said nineteen bean rows, or ninety; and Byron, when his blood was up, would have said nine hundred. But Mr Yeats comes from a land of peasants, and he knows how many beans make nine.

This obstinate belief that twice two is four, and three times three is nine, undoubtedly possessed the great peasant's intelligence when he argued with all the intelligentsia of Europe. They were the finest intellects of the age. They said so; and they ought to know.

The Pope never pretended to have an extraordinary intellect; but he professed to be right, and he was. All honest Athists, all honest Calvinists, all honest men who mean anything, or believe or deny anything, will have reason to thank their stars (a heathen habit) for the peasant in that high place. He killed the huge heresy that two heads are better than one when they grow on the same neck. He killed the pragmatist idea of eating a cake and having it. He left people to agree with his creed or disagree with it. But not free to misrepresent it. It was exactly what any peasant taken from any of our hills and plains would have said. But there was something more in him that would not have been in the ordinary peasant. For all this time he had wept for our tears; and he broke his heart for our bloodshed.

By Prof. Benjamin Ives Gilman,

The Distinguished American Scholar, in an Address.

FROM the beginning of this nation one man was as good as another at the polls. Every vote cast was given the same weight. It followed from the recognition of the likenesses of men as dominant, and the recognition of differences obscured. Leading men [illegible] be thought of as like experts [illegible] and efficiency of the [illegible] acknowledgement of competence [illegible] of an acknowledgement of [illegible] We of the United States [illegible] ntrified in the belief that [illegible] nguished himself in any [illegible] to distinguish himself in [illegible]

[illegible] national experience confirmed the [illegible] ry turn. Pioneer conditions bring [illegible] and man. The solid citizen in a [illegible] is called on to be at once a [illegible] manufacturer for [illegible] for soldier and a soldier for [illegible] a lawyer for justice, a [illegible] the body, an educator for the mind [illegible] for the soul.

[illegible] civilization of the United States [illegible] Da Vinci in Benjamin Frank- [illegible] later progress yet thoroughly [illegible] of the allround American, [illegible] The subjugation of a continent [illegible] main a business matter, and [illegible] may learn a business [illegible] its [illegible] practice of naming any capable [illegible] ce has maintained itself [illegible] unpassing excellence has [illegible] been essential. We have fought successful wars with citizen soldiery and [illegible] great in peace with practical men in [illegible] public. To Ariel our democ- [illegible] ra of mediocrity; Schop- [illegible] nation of plebeians; an [illegible] passed among us the [illegible] the perception of that [illegible] differentiation that makes [illegible] man; [illegible] one else. This is the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] by our [illegible] ings.

[illegible] and it behooves us to [illegible] the [illegible] of the emphasis which [illegible] ing responsibility impose [illegible] upon purposes, upon [illegible] of special fitness. [illegible] course proven an abso- [illegible] of essential times learned in [illegible] We must [illegible] back upon history; but [illegible] to go on to a new social ideal which shall [illegible] square at once with our political creed and [illegible] existing national conditions.

First, as to our political creed. The parity of voters obscures, but also implies the difference of men's capacity. In affirming that persons of a certain sex and reaching certain mental, moral and economical standards should be counted alike in the process of government, it presupposes others who do not possess these qualifications and are not to be counted at all. The conception of the equal distribution of capacity among men is negatived by the political device itself which fostered it.

It may be asked: What then becomes of the belief that men are created equal? If that renowned assertion does not mean that one man is as good as another, that all persons would show like capacity with like opportunity, what does it mean? Something totally different. Did it claim that every babe newborn might, under favorable circumstances, become what an other may, it would seek to persuade us that males might become mothers. Instead of this and other absurdities, but little less glaring, it proclaims the logical postulate that all real differences of human capacity are sensible facts of the present world.

In Jefferson's glowing words, the inhabitants of this created frame bring none of their disparities with them from the invisible. There are no such things as divine rights, withdrawn from human scrutiny. The doctrine of equality affirms that only those persons who show themselves different should be treated differently. Its motto is the Roman challenge "Aut tace, aut face"—in modern American, "Put up or shut up." True democracy is scientific method applied to politics. It accepts as inevitable in the political sphere also what Huxley called the great tragedy of science—"the slaughter of a beautiful theory by an ugly fact."

The belief that a man who has shown exceptional powers in any one direction will also show them in any other is such a beautiful theory, exposed by our political creed to slaughter by ugly facts. Within narrow limits they confirm it. A capable farmer or efficient selectman will, in all probability, prove a good teacher of the rule of three, or a good postmaster. Beyond narrow limits they disprove it. Probably neither could teach Abelian functions well, or manage a wireless station. But, whether verified or falsified, it is not the generalization itself, but the test of it, which is the sum and substance of the principle of equality. This is a doctrine of method, not a statement of results. It repeats in modern words the ancient injunction—"By their fruits ye shall know them." It is the merit system generalized. Admitting all veritable disparities of human capacity, and excluding all mystic disparities, the equality of the Declaration is simple common sense. Denying them all indiscriminately, the equality of its interpretation is literally nonsense.

Second, as to our national conditions. They are no longer those of pioneer life. The task of leading the civilization of the United States has ceased to resemble a business. No man, however able, can learn it in all its branches. Growth, as is its wont, has developed heterogeneity from homogeneity. The arts we now practise have become as long as the lives we can devote to them. Our farmers, our manufacturers, our builders, our soldiers, our lawyers, our doctors, our educators, our religious leaders, are now different persons, each given wholly to his work.

The era of the all-round man has at last gone for us also, as centuries ago it went for the old world. The excellence that comes alone from the long exercise of special aptitude is everywhere demanded, and the demand is everywhere being met. The era of mediocrity, the nation of plebeians, is on its way to bringing forth aristocracies of demonstrated ability, and the sense of personality—the recognition of that delicate but real differentiation that makes each man himself and no one else—will not long delay its advent.

The democracy of individuality, the democracy that accepts all proven differences and no others, is the new social ideal, squaring at once with the creed of our fathers and our own conditions. With our political creed, for the doctrine of equality, in denying all supersensible differences, stops short at the sensible world. Personality is its presupposition. With our national conditions, for the all-round man is bested in every line by the exceptional man in that line, and only the best has become good enough, for us. The Jack-of-all-trades is master of none, and our progress calls for masters everywhere. Finally, the democracy of individuality makes for the union in which there is strength. The new ideal is not that of a society of persons increasingly like each other, and hence increasingly sufficient each to himself, but of persons increasingly different each from the other, and hence increasingly necessary each to the other.

While the Declaration proclaimed our independence of other peoples, it assumes our interdependence among ourselves. A citizenship of similars is like sands, composed of particles each as complete as any and with no tendency to cohere, and a political house built upon it will fall.

A citizenship of dissimilars is like the rock, composed of particles supplementing and cleaving to each other, and a political house built upon it will stand.

Medical Publicity the Only Way to Break Medical Mediaevalism

By Dr. Leonard Keene Hirshberg.

IF his medical society runs true to form, the young doctor who wisely and uprightly flaunted the fossilism of medical publicity in the face to announce widely and promptly in the daily press a method to prevent pneumonia by bichloride of mercury will be censured or expelled from membership among such "conservatives" for his announcement through a non-exclusive journal of his discovery.

The mock-sincerity and unconscious hypocrisy of alleged medical leaders, medical societies and medical experts [illegible] isolation officers against this use of the daily press and popular magazine has a mediaeval ring to it that would be amusing if it were not destructive of the dissemination of [illegible]

Dr. Gould, the distinguished [illegible] and honest editor of American Medicine, [illegible] of the few candid writers, thinkers and [illegible] who seems willing to give this ancient survival of secrecy, clannishness and occultism a deathblow. I refer to the foolish New [illegible] and Puritanical contention so dear to doctors of a certain class that medical news, no matter how important or how interesting to the general public, should always have its first presentation in the official organs of the professions. They insist that any doctor who procures or even permits announcement of his achievements or discoveries in the daily papers is a sinner beyond compassion or redemption.

Disagreeing utterly with these survivals from another age, and realizing that the war against disease neither is nor ought to be a mystery carefully guarded from the uninitiate, the editor of American Medicine says that the great majority of physicians first learn from the lay press of new things affecting their work. They do look for the full and accurate details later in the technical [illegible] but the facts were not [illegible] elsewhere they would come to the attention of only those few men who happen to see a particular journal." Then comes a magnificent illustration of the truth: "This is the way that Mendel's great discovery was lost for over twenty years."

It was, indeed, and for a good deal over twenty years—for thirty-six to be exact. For it was in 1865 that Mendel wrote the essay on hybrid peas which now ranks among the greatest three or four contributions ever made by one man to science. In the most orthodox and "ethical" manner it was first printed—a year later—in the "transactions" of the society in Brunn for the study of the natural sciences to which he belonged. There, if it had a single reader, not one of them even glimpsed its importance, and it remained buried from the world until 1900, when some strange chance brought it at about the same time to the attention of three men who could appreciate its worth and meaning.

Had Mendel's paper, or an intelligent abstract of it, appeared first in a real newspaper with a real circulation, it certainly would have come to the notice of the group headed by Darwin, the theory of evolution would have been at once modified, and a vast amount of subsequent work in this field would have been done in a clear light, not a confusing fog of error as to the exact nature of cross matings.

The journal of the American Medical Association boasts only of a circulation of less than seventy thousand. The New York Medical Journal and the Medical Council have few more, while other medical or scientific journals average only five hundred to the edition.

A small press dispatch, however, which states briefly that Dr Simon Flexner, of the Rockefeller institute, has perfected a meningitis serum, or that Dr. Rufus Cole has made a successful pneumonia serum, will reach the eyes of millions of sufferers, and no doubt nearly two hundred thousand physicians, nurses, hospital authorities and scientific investigators.

Save only for infrequent minor errors, not a sane justification exists other than selfishness, clannishness and insularism for aged authorities and slowly moving medical men to object to the newspaper, rather than the mass journal of insignificant circulation, imparting the fact universally.

The press, as is shown in the instance of the Radium and the Friedmann fiascos, does more good when it spreads forthwith and at first hand all medical announcements, good, bad and indifferent, than when it withholds news by virtue of a secret agreement with some self-appointed medical committee or society. Even when an announcement with glaring errors is thus sent broadcast the press, rather than before the eyes of only sixty thousand busy physicians—most of whom neglect to read the articles, to understand them, or to have a layman rub it under their noses—it does only good.

It will be confessed by most honorable, broad-minded physicians that articles appearing in medical journals are rarely if ever disputed, denied, corrected, or their authors brought to book. Rewrite, however, 75 per cent of these technical articles into plain English and publish them in a newspaper or a popular magazine, when lo! all the doughty man hunters, crusaders and jealous medical competitors, under the false armor of the public weal and the universal uplift, will sail in wilily nilly, "shocked and scandalized" at such unethical conduct. The culprit will be haled before the chairs, the grand warden will show him his heinous offenses, and he will be impolitely kicked out of Medical Holy of Holies.

Dr. William Todd, at a recent medical society meeting held for the purpose—and with absurd success in the city in question—of making all the city newspapers agree to publish no medical or near medical information that was not subject to said medical society's committee on publicity, arose and [illegible]

"It is very embarrassing to the men of the medical profession, many of whom are professors, to have to learn first from their patients of new methods of diagnosis, of new treatments, of new procedures, new germs and new drugs."

Thus innocently and with uncommon naivete he exposed some of the underlying keenness of the "thayeristic" anti-publicity crusade. It is less the open stand for the public welfare as for an unconscious, deeply hidden embarrassment that others may learn a new truth months beforehand.

Some of the most noteworthy blows against medical smugism and surgical superstition have been able to reach the vitals of the medical profession only through the lay press and the popular magazines.

An article last year, April or May, 1913, in one magazine tabulated a list of valuable and accepted present-day medical usages, none of which had ever appeared in a scientific periodical, and all of which scoffed at, abused, and at first rejected, originated with poorly educated unschooled, non-medical men. One of these, to wit, the use of the electric fan in pneumonia, first suggested by Mr. Fred A. Walker, a newspaper editor, has undoubtedly saved as many lives as the new nameless mixture combined with bichloride of mercury.

Indeed, if some of the persistent superstitions of physicians, such as calling fifty-seven different disorders from flat feet to curvature of the spine by the delusive misnomer "rheumatism"; the wrong use of alcohol as a stimulant; the mistaken treatment of hemorrhages with ergot; the curious belief that avafoctida and valerian have medicinal values; if all of these facts were exploded in newspapers with their millions of readers instead of in little medical periodicals rarely read even by their few busy subscribers, the errors and exaggerations—which are as common and less often corrected in journals—which inevitably creep into all printed pages would be more than overbalanced by the accuracies.

Thus shall the press the people's health maintain,

Pledged to the people, be not the doctors' paw.

Then mightiest of the mighty means,
On which the arm of progress leans,
Man's noblest mission to advance,
His rights enforce, his wrongs redress—

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Presented by the Hearst Sunday Newspapers in Collaboration with the Famous Pathe Players in a Photo-Play Serial Novel

Sanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other, but she wants two years of thrilling experiences seeing life before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell sees the half-exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his nerveless grasp while her lips whisper a strange message from the remote past.

Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life, and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription blank a brief will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage. Hicks, a race-track man, and Owen conspire to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish this.

"WHY didn't I go? Why did I trust it to Balthazar?"

There are men who make a religion of wickedness. There are men who so worship the idols of evil that they can feel a kind of remorse in the failure of their cruel machinations. Raymond Owen was one of these. He was a coward. He aimed to be colossally a thief. But he had mind—intellect. The power of his strange brain was only misdirected, not diminished, by the inherent cruelty of his nature and the soul-deadening force of the drugs he used. But he had that weakness of all men who trust to others the execution of sinful designs—the terror of suspense.

To him now the library of Castle Marvin, flooded softly with the sunshine of mid-afternoon, scented of the flowers from the garden, was a place of fear and peril.

The vines of the veranda made lazy shadows shifted with the shifting of the vine leaves on the wall of the library. They got on Owen's nerves.

Owen was a man who was waiting for the joy of a death message. The waiting tortured him. He was not afraid to hear that Harry and Pauline were dead. He was afraid that he might hear they were alive.

The dimming light in the library drove him out to the fresh air of the veranda. He turned sharply, however, and dashed back into the library. He caught up the telephone feverishly in trembling hands.

"Yes—Owen," answered the secretary.

"It is all well. It is done," came the musical words of the gypsy.

Owen softly returned the telephone receiver to its hook. A smile of complacence overspread his sallow face. He had not dared to ask questions, but he felt sure that if Balthazar had made his way to Westbury—the nearest place where a telephone could be had—the work had been fully completed. He felt sure that Harry and Pauline lay dead in the sealed pit of the ruined factory.

"Yes," said Raymond Owen, calmly, "this is Castle Marvin."

"Tell Mr. Marvin all Braithwait is burning—the factory's gone. We can't stop the fire."

"I mean I'm the manager"——

But Owen had hung up the receiver and was turning with a look of utter satisfaction away from the table.

"He will think I am dashing madly to warn the household," he whispered pleasantly to himself

The automobile in which Harry and Pauline lay helpless crushed its way slowly along the brambled road that Owen and Balthazar had traversed a few hours before.

Harry lay on his back in the bottom of the tonneau; Pauline lay on the seat. Balthazar, with a drawn revolver in his hand, stood guard over them. But the machine moved so slowly that the other gypsies, on foot, kept pace with it. To any un different eye, they were all fugitives of the conflagration.

The automobile stopped. Harry and Pauline were lifted from it and carried rapidly through a narrow path. The swish of the bushes told them that they were in a secluded place, but their blindfolded eyes gave them no clew to their whereabouts.

To Harry it was certainty that this was the end. He had seen the face of the gypsy Balthazar while they were binding him in the shadow of the by-road, in the glare of the fire. But as he lay on the bottom of the automobile, the soft fold of a silken girdle brushed his face. He caught the scent of it. No attifice of perfume, no breath of blossom—only the aureate aroma of her he loved. Men who have loved greatly know that good women breathe a fragrance holy and sublime.

So, as their captors bore them through the overgrown pathway, he knew that she was near him, and he gave thanks that, if death came, together they should share it.

They heard the change of the footsteps from the soft mold of the woods to the board flooring of a house.

"When did he leave us—where did he go?" demanded Balthazar.

"We do not know—he was with us when we bound the prisoners."

"Look behind the barrels there," he ordered nervously.

Two men rolled a barrel from the corner of the wrecked room and revealed, carefully prepared and arranged, the tools and the mortar and the piled bricks that Ravelli had promised to provide.

"Go ahead," he said. "You know what is to be done." But his mind was pondering deeply the mystery of the disappearance of the man he had called his chief aide.

The work went forward rapidly. There were evidently others in the group of gypsies who were able to handle mortar and trowel.

But the eyes of Harry and Pauline were blinded, and they did not know what was happening. They heard, faintly, the muffled words of a man: "Good God, Master; it will live in our hearts forever. Let me kill them with the knife."

Then came the sound of a muttered oath, the half metallic shock of fist on flesh and the thud of a falling body.

Pauline and Harry heard the tinkle of metal on stone. They felt—though they could not see—a gathering darkness in the pit where they lay.

To Harry's mind came suddenly the realization of what was being done. The scrape of a trowel trimming the oozed mortar from the bricks told him. He was thankful that he could not speak. He was grateful that she could not ask him what was happening.

He writhed in his bonds and found that he could move a little. Drawing up his tied feet he thrust them sideways and struck no wall. It was apparent that the black chamber into which they had been thrust was somewhat commodious. There was plenty of air.

Trusting still to the marvelous and kindly whims of fate that had saved them from so many dangers, Harry's mind began the fashioning of plans of rescue even in this abysmal tomb.

The sound of a low laugh came from beyond the wall. They could hear the rapid retreating footsteps of men. The beat of the footsteps on the board floor were softened into the beat of footsteps on leaf-strewn ground. The voices died away. There came the distant choking of an automobile that was being cranked. They heard no more.

Harry, physically powerful as he was, could move only the fraction of an inch at a time in the grimly calculated bonds that held him, hand and foot.

He was fearful of moving in the pit, because he could not tell into what chasm he might fall. If he turned upon his side, it might mean instant death for him, ultimate death for the only one he cared to save. He kept on dragging himself along the rock floor. As he did so he scraped the gag along the floor

His head struck something. He felt the hand of Pauline against his forehead. He turned upon his side and ground the gag from his mouth against the wall. He caught in his teeth the end of the cord that bound her hands.

A low sputtering sound came as if from afar off, but he did not give heed to it. He was frantically tearing with his teeth at the knot in the rope.

Paulina strained with her frail hands to loosen the rope, while Harry tore at it. It was impossible for him to tell her that she only tightened it by her struggles

But at last he had cut it free. He felt her draw her hands out of the opened noose. He felt the freed arms suddenly clasp him

"Polly!" he cried, faint but encouraging.

"Harry! Harry!" she gasped as she tore the bandages from her own lips and eyes. "Where are we? What does it all mean" Why—Harry—there's smoke—it's coming through the walls!"

"You must unite my hands, dearest," he said.

With a little cry of self-reproach, she stooped over him.

"But the smoke—don't you smell the smoke?" whispered Pauline.

He made no answer, but with deft, strong hands tore the bonds from her feet, then from his own. They arose in their lonely and mysterious prison, hand in hand.

Out at Castle Marvin all word had ceased. The servants who had gathered excitedly after Harry and Pauline drove away were now on the roof of the garage, gazing fascinated at the far flames of burning Braithwait.

Even had the household been watchful and at work they would not have seen the figure of the exile Ravelli creep through the woods and through the shrubbery of the garden.

Ravelli was more than cautious. He was risking not only his freedom but his life, on this mysterious errand. For to accomplish his purpose he had deserted Balthazar, the gypsy, in the midst of dangerous work; had left the captors of Pauline and Harry at the moment when he was most needed.

Ravelli himself could hardly have explained why he had been so foolhardy. He knew as well then as he did now that he would be killed the first time he should meet a member of the band of Balthazar. Some deeper, more compelling call than that of fear had lured him to leap into the thicket while the automobile drove away, to take the highroad amid the crowding, weeping refugees of Braithwait, to mingle with them and shelter his flight in their excitement.

It was a call from the past. As Ravelli had lain behind the bushes on the Marvin grounds a few hours before, and watched the mechanics working over Harry Marvin's airship, the memories of his old daring days came flooding back to him—the days when he had been a lieutenant of the Austrian air corps—the days before he had sold the secrets of his country to a prospective foe

There lies always some gold of inspiration in the slag of the blackest heart Ravelli loved the air. He had loved, as if they were living things, the machines that had carried him on his daring flights.

The sight of the splendid aeroplane—last masterly development of the inventor's skill—had awakened in the exile the old longing for the thrill of speed and peril. He crept on stealthily through the garden.

As he parted the bushes adjacent to the aviation field, he saw the little group of servants on the roof of the garage. Even the aviator and his mechanics had left their work to watch the fire. The aeroplane, trimmed for flight, stood unguarded in the open field.

It was the matter of but a moment for Ravelli to step through the bushes and seat himself in the machine. He started the engine. With the shift of a lever, the machine wheeled forward and took to the air as gracefully as a bird

The joyful look on the face of the driver was the look of a madman. He had accomplished his purpose. He felt the thrill of triumph. The screams and shouts that now echoed after him as the Marvin servants saw him swinging away were as plaudits to his ears

Ravelli had drunk heavily the night before. He had been drinking all day. His daring suddenly became reckless. He turned the machine and drove back over the Marvin grounds, over the roof of the garage, where the servants were standing. They broke and fled for the scuttle as he sent the aeroplane close to the roof.

He swerved abruptly and shot away in the direction of Braithwait.

It was not totally dark in the chamber. There were drippings of light from crevices in the roof. And now they could not only scent the smoke; they could see it puff through the floor beneath them.

The smoke began to stifle them. Harry, leading Pauline along the dim corridor, stopped at every pace to hurl his strength against the wall. He hoped that he might find the place where the bricks had been newly laid. But the wall was more than a foot thick and the bricks had been laid skillfully. No-where was there the slightest yielding

"Harry, do you know where we are" asked Pauline in a frightened whisper.

"I am not sure," he answered. "But I believe that it is the old factory. I don't know any place else of this kind that they could have reached so quickly."

"You mean it was lighted to—to—kill us?" she asked, her voice still tremulous, but with a gentle calmness that meant courage.

"Harry, you needn't be afraid to tell me. If we are going to die, I will not be afraid. If you are with me when I die, I will not be afraid."

He turned and caught her crushingly in his arms. He pressed his lips gently to her forehead, then lingeringly to her lips. "You are the gamest woman in the world." he said

"But—Harry—is it—is this one of the awful things that I have done? Is this one of the dangers that I have dragged you into because I was so silly?"

"You?" he cried. "Never in the world. They were after me this time, Polly. I was the fool to let you come with me."

Even the heat of the fire oppressed them now. Pauline's voice was faint as she answered.

"I am glad I came with you."

Again he caught her in his arms. He felt her form weaken She tried to speak again but the choking smoke stifled her words. The dead weight of her body told him she had fainted.

He laid her on the ground and bent over her, calling wildly

"Polly! Polly! Don't give up yet!"

But there came no answer. His utter helplessness to aid filled him with a kind of madness. Again he assaulted the wall. He tore at the crevices with his naked hands. His hands ran red. The smoke poured in. The room was fogged with it now.

Harry stooped on his hands and knees and crawled the length of the corridor, feeling in every cranny and corner for some possible weapon or tool with which to break the wall. The place was bare of everything but dust and mold.

As he turned back from the far end of the corridor to the central place, he felt his head swim.

It is coming—the end now," he gasped. He scrambled back along the floor. He had just strength enough to lift Pauline into his arms, to place her head upon his breast, before the darkness fell.

The airman Ravelli had carried supplies with him on his reckless flight. The supplies consisted of two small bottles of whiskey unmixed with water. It had been a tumultuous day for him. But the engineering of the plot against Pauline and Harry Marvin was belittled now in the thrill and the triumph of his last ride. Now and then, as he sped the magnificent machine through the air, Ravelli drank deep of the red poison

He was becoming utterly crazed. He had forgotten entirely now what he had planned to do with the aeroplane after it was stolen. He knew there had been a plan. He was going to sell it to some one, but he could not remember whom.

And then there was Balthazar and his cutthroats. He must keep away from them. Still it would be interesting to watch what they were doing—to watch it from a safe seat in the sky.

That struck Ravelli deeply. It seemed an idea happy and heroic. He had been circling the zone of the great fire, but was forced to go so high to avoid the smoke that the spectacle was belittled. He steered now for the place where the towering chimney of the old Marvin factory loomed among the trees

His hand was growing unsteady on the levers. He caught one of the flasks of whiskey and drained the last half of it. He choked. The plane dipped sharply over the wood. His hands were back on the levers in an instant, but it was too late.

The left frame struck into the branches of a tree. The machine spun round. Ravelli, working madly at the levers, held it for a moment, but it was beyond control

Ravelli saw directly before him the ruins of the old factory. The walls where, for a price, he had directed the entombment of Harry and Pauline, loomed gray and ghostlike under the pall of the smoke from the burning town The ancient chimney, beneath which, he knew, lay the imprisoned lovers, towered in his path—not as a tool of crime and profit now, but as a monument to his own doom

The right plane struck the chimney, which crumpled like a card tower under the blow. The bricks of the riven walls half buried Ravelli as he gasped out the final breath of his evil life on the floor of the roofless chamber. The chamber in which lay Harry and Pauline was opened to the air.

Harry awakened as if out of a dream. Sunlight blazed upon his startled eyes. He breathed the fresh air. Around him were ruins. Weakly he got to his feet, and lifting Pauline, reeled out through the great hole that had let in the sun and air

She stirred suddenly in his arms. She opened her eyes. He laid her head upon his shoulder and hurried, so that she might not see the body of the dead Ravelli in the ruins.

The high priced theatres are strongly entrenched with their present attractions, and if it were not for the prospects [illegible] would be hard pressed for any dramatic announcements. However the Boston Theatre stock has imported Blanch Walsh to play in Clyde Fitch's celebrated drama, "The Woman in the Case," while the Castle Square is putting on the much discussed Kenyon play "Kindling," which deals in a [illegible] manner with [illegible] We don't like to talk about [illegible]

Arthur Hammerstein is behaving like a squid and throwing a cloud of inky blackness around "The Trap," which opens at the Majestic Thursday night. Beyond the cast and the names of the authors nothing has been permitted to leak out. I told the representative of Hammerstein that "The Trap" seems to me to be a very ukly name for a play, and he declared that the name was selected because it was so bald and unusual.

Richard Harding Davis is one of the co-authors. A few days ago I read Davis' description of the passage of the German army through Brussels, and it was so vivid that it made me believe that the Germans were unbeatable. And now the undraped Frenchman can penetrating Lee Germany gray given fog that Davis talked about. Who would have believed it. Aside from a tendency to go to war and get arrested as a spy Davis is a good author, and there are sure to be some ideas in "The Trap" if he had anything to do with it. Hammerstein has collected an amazing cast of well-known players, and there are good parts for all of them the acting does will be worth the price of admission.

Nat Wills is back in vaude-ville again. After a season with the Ziegfeld Follies, "The Happy Tramp" has returned to his first love, vaudeville. Wills, by the way, has a private line of his own. He pays a high price for his material. For a number of years he paid Vincent Bryan $100 a week to write new parodies and jokes. It became a great source of annoyance to Wills to find that other monologists were using his material almost as soon as he did.

For a long time the comedian racked his brain to devise some way of stopping the wholesale pilfering upon the plan of selling his parodies at a sum easily afforded by any performer. Nat believes the unholy would not stoop to petty larceny. Since his advertisement to sell parodies has appeared, many five-dollar notes have arrived in Nat's mail, and naturally he is jubilant over the success of his scheme.

"It's easy for them," he says. "I just pay $300 for a good parody, and use it for a few weeks, and then sell it for a five-spot. They're bound to have them anyway, so I guess I might just as well get a little money out of it."

The opera company which William H. Leahy is bringing to the Boston Theatre will perform one service to the Boston music-loving public by reviving several famous operas which have not been performed here for many years. He has announced "La Favorita" for the first week. This opera was composed by Donizetti, and is far stronger dramatically than "Lucia," which is so popular in this country. It is equally as tuneful and will have the advantage of being comparatively fresh.

It is a great many years since there has been an adequate performance of "The Favorite" in this city, although such wonderful airs as "Sprito Gentil" for the bass, familiar to concert goers. Another Donizetti opera which would make a most interesting revival is "Lucrezia Borgia," a furious melodrama, which contains treasures of melody.

I am informed that this opera company has engaged a number of excellent singers and will make its appeal upon the quality of its performances rather than the reputation of operatic stars. As the chorus, ballet and orchestra are from the ranks of the Boston Opera, there should be no difficulty in getting a good ensemble. The chorus will include forty-two singers, there will be a ballet of twelve and an orchestra of thirty-five. The proportions of the company are about those of a good provincial opera house in France or Italy.

It does not often happen that the initial failure of a play to attract turns out to be its best asset in gaining popularity. The strange circumstances attending the first production of "Kindling," however, were the first of a series of lucky accidents that attracted attention to Kenyon's play, and gave it an advertisement that thousands of dollars might have been vainly spent in trying to secure.

"Kindling" was written by an obscure reporter on the San Francisco Examiner named Charles Kenyon, three years ago. It is an indictment against the awful living conditions which many of the very poor have to endure and which are the grim answer to those who preach the full cradle. Maggie Schultz, the wife of an [illegible] working man, is expecting motherhood, and her dread of bringing her baby into the surroundings in which the mature can hardly survive, tempt her to theft. That the theft is from the wealthy woman who owns the tenements in which the Schultzes live only makes the lesson the stronger. In the end Maggie and her unborn child are saved from prison by a big-hearted daughter of the rich, who has this special sense possessed by so many of the new generation.

"Kindling" owes its preservation to the stage to a chance visit paid by three famous writers to the theatre where it was playing to empty houses. Convinced of its vital importance the three writers organized a newspaper campaign that not only gave the play a fifty-weeks' run, but procured it the signal honor of being the first of the series of printed plays published by the Drama League of America.

Miss Minnie Maley of Revere, an earnest suffrage orator, has been visiting boards of trade for several weeks, presenting the card of Ruth Ambrose, Oldport, Me., and endeavoring to interest the boards in the future of that town. It is our duty to expose this young lady. There is no such place as Oldport, and Ruth Ambrose is a fictitious name. Miss Maley is working in the interests of the Plymouth Theatre and is luring boards of trade to "Along Came Ruth." She is lurking successfully, too, because the Quincy Board of Trade attended "Ruth" in a body the other night and have now selected a Quincy girl to go around doing for Quincy what the dramatic Ruth is doing for Oldport.

AMUSEMENTS OF AUTUMN SEASON

Castle Square Theatre.

Beginning Monday evening, September 21, Charles Kenyon's "Kindling" will be given for a week at the Castle Square Theatre by the Craig Players, with Miss Mary Young as "Margie Schultz." This will be the first performance of the play in Boston.

Mr. Kenyon's drama is briefly an indictment against conditions of living and housing that reek with heartbreaking, for the very poor, not only a risk, but too often a waste as well. As long as such tenements exist—and that in which poor Maggie Schultz is facing motherhood, and dreading to tell her "advanced" husband the great news, so long, Mr. Kenyon tells us, will the grim answer of the "submerged" to the national demand for [illegible] cradle be simply: "It isn't worth while, for them—or for us."

The role of Maggie Schults will be filled by Miss Mary Young, while William Carleton will act that of Schults, the enlightened young stevedore, who is her husband. Mrs. Bates, an old Irish woman, [illegible] will fall to the share of that old-time Boston favorite, Kate Ryan, as [illegible] her vicious son, "Steve," a peculiarly vivid and sinister study, to Mr. Dodsley Rawley. The cast will be completed by Alfred Hunt, Morrill Morrison, Al Roberts, George Ernest, Mabel Colcord and Marion Tanner.

Boston Theatre.

Blanche Walsh, in a magnificent revival of Clyde Fitch's greatest dramatic triumph, "The Woman in the Case," has the attention for this week at the Boston Theatre. The announcement of Miss Walsh's appearance in [illegible] will be welcome news to [illegible] hosts of her immense popularity and long absence. [illegible] Boston [illegible] was made [illegible] years ago. The engagement of Miss Walsh, who [illegible] for years occupied a prominent position in the [illegible] of leading American stars, [illegible] an epoch in the stage [illegible] history of this city, as it will signalize her initial appearance at popular prices. Miss Walsh will appear in her original creation of [illegible] Lois. The piece is [illegible] and offers opportunities for [illegible] acting. The [illegible] will be staged under the personal supervision of the producer, [illegible] "The Woman in the Case" is Clyde Fitch in his most prolific work as a [illegible] drama full of tensity and the character in which Miss Walsh will appear enables her to display the full strength of her versatility. Her [illegible] title charms, [illegible] personality were never so apparent as in this [illegible] The popular star will be assisted by most [illegible] of Miss Walsh's competent organization, including Walter Walker, Frederick Murray, Joseph Crehan, William [illegible], Frederick McCabe, Rose Morrison, Mary Gerard, Florence Tewksbury and others. Special scenic equipments are now being prepared for the elaborate production of the play. Remember that the same scale of unheard-of prices will prevail.

Majestic Theatre.

With the re-opening of the Majestic Theatre on Thursday, September 24, will come "The Trap" which is the work of Richard Harding Davis and Arthur Hammerstein. The advance literature fails to state whether it is a comedy or a drama, but the interior of the [illegible] seats to indicate that it is a play of the latter class. The cast which will present "The Trap" is said to be one of the strongest seen in America in a decade or more, and is peculiarly emphasized by the fact that of the nine principal characters four of the best known male members are leading men. One of these is [illegible] Hackett, who needs no introduction to Boston. Another is [illegible] Marshall and another of the prominent men is Ralph Delmore. Elaine Hammerstein, who made her professional debut last year, will be seen in another of the [illegible] roles, and Janet Beecher who for several years starred under the Belasco management, will assume another. The other important parts will be portrayed by Gertrude Dawes, Frank Jones and George Harcourt. The engagement of "The Trap" at the Majestic will be a limited one.

Keith's Theatre.

Nothing entirely new in stage effects is promised for B. F. Keith's Theatre this week. It is a mountain of soap bubbles, which forms the background in the sensational "Dance of the Temptress," performed by Bert French and Alice Ellis. A huge volcano in the back of the stage belches forth countless globes of light and color, filling the entire stage, and flow down over the footlights. Colored lights are thrown upon them and turn the entire scene into a veritable fairyland of rainbow hues. Nothing just like this stage effect has ever before been shown in this country. Nat Wills, "The Happy Tramp," and one of the funniest comedians on the American stage, returns to Boston after an absence of two years' time. He brings an entirely new and original repertoire of stories and parodies. In response to many requests it has been decided to hold over Will H. Cressy and Blanche Dayne for a second and positively last week. The latest of all delineators of the rural New England character will present their best known comedy playlet, "The Village Lawyer." Other splendid features of a great bill will be Lyons and Yosco, the musical and trick comedians; Aboo Ben Hamed's great troupe of Whirlwind Arabs, including gun spinners, whirling dervishes and cyclonic acrobats; Butler Haviland and Alice Thornton in the new comedy, "Get - Poor - Quick - Wellington"; the Five Annapolis Boys; Hope Vernon, the singing comedienne; Adelyne and Hill, the clown and the tired man, and news events in motion pictures.

"Peg o' My Heart" has entered upon her third week of increased popularity at the Cort. Florence Martin is the charming lady [illegible] who first made her appearance in New York to be quite the equal of Laurette Taylor who created the part.

Wilbur Theatre.

"The Road to Happiness," that charming drama of country life in New England, which William Hodge is scoring the success of his career at the Wilbur, will now be seen for the last time. Reports are that "The Road to Happiness" will run out the season in Boston.

Shubert Theatre.

"High Jinks," that merry comedy, full of pretty girls and clever comedians, life-laughter and melody, with Stella Mayhew as the bright particular star, begins its fifth week of big business at the Shubert.

Tremont Theatre.

"Madame President," the gay and frivolous Dailie farce, which fascinates everybody through the magic of Fanny Ward, is still at the Tremont and enjoying increasing popularity. The daring and dash of Miss Ward is declared to be remarkable in an actress not of French blood.

Colonial Theatre.

[illegible] its fifth and last week at the Colonial. Mr. Savage has surprises in [illegible] for the last two weeks. Victor Herbert's [illegible] operatic favorite, J. K. Murray, in the role of the old Gypsy in place of Henry Leone, Mr. Murray was [illegible] Castle Square Opera and is one of the founders of opera in English.

Plymouth Theatre.

"Along Came Ruth," with Florence Shirley in the [illegible] role, is [illegible] winning the approval of the Boston theatre goers. They [illegible] beginning to [illegible] week.

Gaiety Theatre.

The new and successful burlesque "The Winning Widows," which is booked at the Gaiety this week, is not a one-part play; neither is it a mere excuse for a series of vaudeville acts and a few choruses. The piece has a well defined plot and an excellent reason for the many laughable and amusing complications kaleidoscopically funny situations, punctuated by the wittiest of dialogue, bring the most obstinate smile to the surface.

The play is in two acts. Act one is laid at the home of the Hileys on Riverside Drive, New York. Act two takes place at Brighton, showing the boards and the beach.

The cast numbers forty people supporting Mae Rose, Ben Holmes and Leona Fox and with the carloads of special scenery carried, it is safe to assume that a performance much above the ordinary, will be witnessed.

Orpheum Theatre.

Roland West's latest dramatic success, "Between Eight and Nine," an intense drama, will be the headliner. The original "Five Merry Youngsters," one of the first so-called "school acts" in the country, will appear in Boston after an absence of two years. The big extra feature on the bill will be the first appearance in Boston and the East of Richard the Great, the monkey, who [illegible] of himself." Countess Sedchy, playing the [illegible] Gypsy [illegible] Dixon and the Hampby Sisters and other acts will complete the bill.

Cesear Rivolo, who claims to be the world's greatest change artist, will be the feature for the last half of this week.

Scollay Square Olympia Theatre.

The following high class vaudeville features direct from New York will be seen [illegible] Scollay Square Olympia Theatre this week: Hall and Mitchell, juvenile novelty, Hall and Francis, Ethel Clifton and company; White, Fuller and White, Eight Jamis Troupe, Josephine Sabel, the great Barnetti company in the three-reel photoplay "The Rebel"; Hearst-Selig Weekly, showing news from all parts of the world, and several others.

Modern Theatre.

There will be another double attraction in two excellent [illegible] at the Modern Theatre for the coming week. Edward Abeles, a well-known and popular Broadway star, will appear in the title role of "Bobby Burnit," a stirring photo drama. The other feature photo production will be Klaw & Erlanger's "The Wife."

Howard Athenaeum.

The High Rollers Burlesque Company, with the sensational Kyra, will be featured this week at the Howard Athenaeum. Kyra will contribute a most finished dance, which will prove one of the distinctive hits of the bill. With Charles May Earle, John Black and other favorites will be found in the line. Twenty-five beautiful chorus girls will ornament the stage and participate in all the musical and dancing specialties.

Tremont Temple.

Loew's New Globe

With the opening on Monday next of a new theatre, Loew's New Globe, on Washington street, on the site of the old Globe Theatre, on Monday, September 28, at 9:30 a. m., the W. & A. Bacon Company have made arrangements to hire the [illegible] of their store one of the largest treats of the theatrical year. The W. & A. Bacon Company have bought from the Marcus Loew Company 15,000 ticket [illegible] which entitle any [illegible] of the store to the best available seats in the magnificent new theatre, at any performance on the first four days of the opening week, that is on the days of September 28, 29, 30 and October 1. The attraction at the opening of the beautiful new theatre, one of the finest [illegible] has been made and of the typical all-star Marcus Loew show of vaudeville and first release motion picture plays will make up the bill. The patrons of the Bacon store are therefore to be most heartily congratulated in having an opportunity of obtaining tickets at the great store for the first four days of the new Globe season. The distributing of tickets will begin at the Bacon store on Monday morning, September 28, the day of the New Globe's opening.

Tonight at Keith's.

For the first Sunday concert of the season tonight at B. F. Keith's Theatre, a splendid program has been arranged, headed by Will H. Cressy and Blanche Dayne, Lambert, Nellie Nichols, McWilliams, Blondal and Baldwin, Hamilton and Barnes, Butler Haviland and Alice Thornton, King Collins and the Clifton Sisters and others.

Waldron's Casino.

Frank Finney's peculiar comedy entitled "The Legend of the King," with a score of pretty girls comes to Waldron's Casino with the Monday matinee. Mr. Finney has excelled all his previous efforts in comedy this season and the farce has become one of the most popular on the [illegible] bill. The play is a fairy tale, gay, bright and humorous with plenty of charming music and romance. The company is excellent and includes Mr. Frank Finney, Minnie Burke, Sam J. Adams, Florence Brainerd, Rose Rogers, John P. Griffith, Belle Millette, Ernest Fisher and others.

Mason Shows He Is Master of Make-up

Indian Chief Gives Him Chance to Display Art.

William Mason, general stage director of the Majestic Players, appearing at the Boston Theatre, recently gave new proof of his versatility in the art of make-up. Mr. Mason, who is busy casting and directing his company, appeared last week in the important role of the Indian chief in "The Squaw Man." Near the close of a matinee performance Mr. Mason went to the stage door to snatch a breath of fresh air. He wasn't there more than a minute when a well-dressed, elderly gentleman stepped inside and inquired if Mr Mason was in the house.

"He is," responded the director. "May I see him?" queried the unknown man. "This is he," said Mason. "What do ye mean?" "I ought to know who I am," said Mr. Mason. Whereupon the man offered apologies, made himself known, with the result that the two were busily shaking hands for some time.

A wedding at Marmaduke on the 26th, of much Boston interest, is that of Miss Eleanor Crocker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Uriel Crocker of Marlboro street, Lenox, and Edward M. Howland of Jamaica Plain. the hour is 2:30 o'clock, the place St. Gabriel's Church.

The officiating clergymen will be Rev. M. W. Dewart of Winchester and Rev. Samuel A. Eliot.

The wedding party will be extremely small, Mr. Howland's brother serving as best man. There will be no ushers. The guests will include the immediate families and close friends. A reception will follow at the Summer home of the bride's parents. The young people will take up their residence in West Cedar street, Boston.

Miss Katherine Sinclair Weeks of West Newton and John Washington Davidge of Washington have chosen September 26 for their wedding day as well. * * *

Now that the engagement of the other Foss twin, Miss Helen, has been announced, it would be of real social interest and a novelty that would go down in annals for a long time if a double wedding of the sisters was announced. But I can't say nothing of the sort has appeared.

The date of Miss Helen's wedding with William Whitman Hobbs, son of Mr and Mrs. F. W. Hobbs of Brookline is still in abeyance, and it is generally felt that Miss Helen does not intend to detract from the glory of her sister's great occasion and that no date will be forthcoming for her marriage until after the specified October 10. The wedding of Miss Esther will be somewhat curtailed, it is given out, owing to the fact that the groom-to-be is a British subject, with his country at war.

* * *

As widespread an interest is manifested in the wedding plans Miss Louise Converse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Shepard Converse of No. 36 Lime street, who is to marry Junius Spencer Morgan, heir apparent of the J. Pierpont Morgan millions.

Expectation has been keen as to the date of the Morgan-Converse affair which promises to prove one of the ultra social events of its kind Mrs. Converse has been heard to repeat that the people are still very young. For that reason there is doubt that the match will occur soon, but sometimes it is hard to forecast for Cupid.

* * *

Another Converse girl in the social limelight is Miss Christine Converse, daughter of Mrs. Robert Gould Shaw, who will wed Augustus S Cobb of Milton, Harvard '07, in the near future.

October 7 is the date set for the nuptials at Ipswich of Miss Ruth Appleton and William G. Wendell of Boston.

Matrons Plan Brilliant Entertainments for Boston Debutantes

November will launch the Boston debutantes on the fascinating sea of society, which brings with it less social restrictions to budding womanhood. Parents, relatives and friends will all do their best to heighten the charms and accomplishments of their youthful favorites about to take the momentous step into the social arena, by brilliant entertainments in their honor.

There has been already conferences among the adult hostesses of prospective debutantes to so arrange that none of these entertainments for their youthful honor guests will conflict. Thus each fair bud may witness the full blooming of her sister debutante and will in like manner she comes forth from the seclusion of her formal, social world.

Probably the most brilliant of the season will be that of Miss Elizabeth Mason Paine, daughter of Robert Treat Paine, 2d, of No. 264 Beacon street. Miss Paine's formal introduction to society will be on December 4 at a ball held in the state suite and foyer of the Copley-Plaza.

Miss Augusta Converse is another debutante of the late Fall, whose coming-out party will be at the Lime street home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse.

The month of November has also been chosen by Mrs. Charles Aldrich to present her charming young daughter, Miss Beverly Richards. Mrs. Aldrich has selected the Tuileries for the reception and dance, and the date will be shortly announced.

Miss Penelope Parkman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parkman of No. 39 Commonwealth avenue, will be presented on November 23 at a ball at the Somerset. Mrs. R. W. Lovett has also chosen the Somerset for her ball, but the date has not been announced.

Others whose debut have not yet been announced but who are expected to make their bows this season are Alice Thayer, Mrs. Van Rensselaer Thayer's oldest daughter; Silvia Curtis, the Ralph Curtisses' daughter; Elizabeth Zerrahn, Sylvia Warren, Frances Prescott, Anna Agassis of the Hamilton contingent, Isabella Councilman of the York Harbor colony, Frances Jackson of Milton, Margaret Rotch, Mrs. A. Laurence Rotch's daughter, and Penelope B. Parkman, the Henry Parkmans' daughter.

Debutants function dates so far are tentative. October 1 will really decide the positive social calendar for these affairs.

Debutante Honors for Miss Richards

Miss Beverly Richards of Beacon street, a granddaughter of the late Thomas Bailey Aldrich, must prepare for a brilliant debutante season. Aside from the dance which Miss Adele Thayer is to give for her in the latter part of the year, her mother, Mrs. Charles Frost Aldrich, widow of one of the twin sons of the famous writer, is to introduce her formally at a large dance at the Copley-Plaza.

Miss Richards, who is among the smart Summer colony at Dublin, N. H., where her Summer home is near that of Miss Thayer's, and known as "Gnomo Farm," is a clever young horsewoman and a general all-round athlete. She is a pronounced type of blonde.

She looked especially well the other day at the horse show at Dublin, which the smart Summer colony gave in aid of the Red Cross fund. Miss Richards wore a gown of white rathe, so popular this season. The bodice was almost entirely of white lace, in the heavy linen effect. Her hat was a large white picture one of leghorn, with trimming of white satin ribbon and pink roses.

Can One Remain Neutral and Wear Those War Fashions?

Though the American womanfolk will wear the warlike fashions designed for them this Fall and Winter—war bonnets, Triple Entente, Triple Alliance, Napoleon, Russian Cossack and Tommy Atkins hats and turbans, or the new shoulder bouquet, as vivid as a military or naval decoration or epaulette—they will n o doubt maintain the non-partisan spirit being infused into every American.

Inlands of the North Shore Are Now the Hunters' Rendezvous

During these wonderful, early Autumn mornings and late afternoons the inlands of the North Shore are being stirred from their rural lethargy by the hunting coteries affiliated with the Myopia Hunt Club at Hamilton. To one uninitiated into the ethics of hunting, "pony drags" and "drag hounds" are vague terms.

For the thirty or more years of the Myopia Hunt Club's existence, Boston lovers of the chase and the hunt have established a famous club at Hamilton and developed fearless horsemanship in the country environs of Wenham, Hamilton, Ipswich and their neighboring villages and hamlets.

At the present time the Myopia Hunt Club possesses hunting privileges over 1,000 farms lying between Hamilton and Portsmouth, N. H.

So each of these September mornings at dawn, or late afternoon, Myopia's huntsmen and huntswomen are riding "to hounds." It is a sport of unknown climaxes with sagacious and keen-scented dogs of the hunting breed the leaders.

The order of a hunting meet is arranged in this fashion. The "layer out of the drags" or in other words the courses, precedes the hunting contingent some thirty minutes or more over the course he has chosen for the day. It is his duty to drag over the course the "scent." From the club's kennels next come the yelping hounds, joyful in their anticipation of freedom and the chase. The "master of the hounds," and his "whip" are in charge.

It is not long after all are gathered at "the meet," that the hounds are racing over hill, dale, wall, brook, fence or what not in search of the cause or termination of that subtle scent. In anticipatory rush comes the master, his whip and the men and women riders. None know where the chase will lead. Where the dogs go they follow.

Red flags dot their course at intervals. They mean some danger is in the pathway, like a barbed wire fence. It means a detour and added speed and endurance to keep up with the disappearing hounds. Here comes a high jump. Horses and riders must take it. They do so fearlessly.

Thus the "layer out of the drags" displays his strategic points of the elusiveness of the hunt and makes the courses each hunting day a little more interesting, a bit hazardous, but yet safe.

The "pony drags," the hunting meets for the boys and girls, sons and daughters of the members, must also conform to hunting ethics, yet be modified so much of the ability of the elementary school of hunting. Their sport is being somewhat curtailed, as school duties now engage their attention.

The centre of the hunting stage is now being taken by the older club members, with "drag hounds" and real fox hunts. They will continue until Winter. Some twenty riders is the daily average to date participating in the meets. They embrace the members of the Appleton and Rice families from Ipswich, and the G. S. Mandells from Hamilton. These families provide the finest riders and horses at the drags. The Rice and Mandell stables boast of some forty splendid hunting horses.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard D. Ahl, Mrs. Thomas Petree and Miss Julia Meyer (just returned from Europe) are also hunting this Fall. The Misses Mary Curtis and Alice Thorndike are likewise hunting enthusiasts.

The ladies this year seem partial to khaki, grey or navy blue riding habits. The pink hunting coat is not generally seen.

At the Topsfield Agricultural Fair on next Tuesday afternoon the club will have a "meet" and give their annual exhibition of jumping.

If You Have Any Hair Trouble Read This

Men, women and children do not wash their hair and heads often enough. There has been a mistaken idea for years that frequent washing is bad for the hair. The result is that nearly everybody has more or less hair trouble. Practically everybody has dandruff, and hundreds have hair that is too oily or dry, or hair that is faded or lifeless.

The result of all these troubles is falling hair, and after that comes baldness.

If you will wash your head at least once a week with Birt's Head Wash, your hair will take on new vigor, simply because your scalp will be put in a clean, natural condition, so that your hair can have a chance to grow as it should.

Birt's Head Wash is made of Refined Creamy Soap, Cochin Cocoanut Oil, White of Eggs, Glycerin and Salicylic Acid. Any doctor will tell you this is a good formula.

Birt's Head Wash does not simply take off the dirt, dandruff and microbes from the hair, but it leaves the scalp soft and moist, and the hair fine and glossy. You can see an improvement in the condition of your hair the first time you use it, and dandruff will disappear in a short time. You will be astonished how many impurities will be found on your hair and head, because nothing takes them out like Birt's Head Wash.

B. C. Starts A Big Year

With a most auspicious opening Boston College entered on a new era of prosperity, when her doors were opened on Tuesday to nearly 500 students.

For a college whose total student registration only a few years ago was less than 300, the growth is highly gratifying. On commencement day, last June, forty-five were successful in receiving the degree of bachelor of arts. This year that number will lack but ten of being doubled.

The student activities have already been grasped with a vim. The college monthly, The Stylus, has as its new editor, Maurice J. Flynn, '15, whose work on the paper during the past three years has been such as to win for him this coveted honor. He has an efficient corps of assistants, who have earned their places by consistent and untiring work.

Things are humming in athletics. An added interest prior to the completion of the athletic field, which is one of the finest, the field has been in course of construction for two years. It comprises a diamond, a gridiron and an excellent track.

Just before the opening of classes, ground was broken for the construction of the new faculty building. Although it will not be completed during the present year it is hoped that temporary quarters may be obtained for the faculty. The building will be the second in the fine group which, when entirely constructed, will be among the most complete college buildings in the country.

With all these improvements and student changes, increases in registration and other activities, Boston College seems to be coming substantially into its own.

READ THIS SYNOPSIS FIRST.

Marta Galland and her mother live on the frontier between the country of the Browns, their own, and the country of the Grays. By their house winds a road through the pass to the range. To hold the pass is to hold the range.

Their house was built by the first Galland on the land that his king had given him for one of the most brilliant feats of arms in the history of the pass. Beyond the house rises the ruins of a castle centuries old, its tower an infant.

Among the friends of the Gallands, two are prominent. One is Landstron, the young chief of intelligence on the Brown general staff, who is first met Marta during the days of a scrofulous anti-Gray agitation. The other is Westerling, vice-chief of staff of the Grays and actual chief in all but name.

Marta is teaching a class of children at La Tir, near her home, to abhor war, and is making them take an oath that when they grow up they will never cross a frontier to kill their fellow men.

Marta discovers that her old gardener is really one of Lanstron's secret service men in disguise. She reproaches Lanstron, who urges the nation's need. He leads her into the tunnel under the old tower. There he opens a secret panel and shows her a telephone.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"If out of a thousand possible useless one source succeeds, then the cost and pains of the other nine hundred and ninety-nine are more than repaid," he was saying urgently, the soldier subordinate in him. "Some of the best service we have had has been absurd in its simplicity and its audacity. In time of war more than one battle has been decided by a thing that was a trifle in itself. No matter what your preparation, you can never remove the element of chance. An hour gained in information about your enemy's plans may turn the tide in your favor. A Chinese peasant spy, because he happened to be intoxicated, was able to give the Japanese war warning prior to Kuroki to make full disposition for receiving the Russian attack in force at the Sha-ho. There are many other incidents of like nature in history. So it is my duty to neglect no possible method, however absurd."

By this time he was at the head of the steps. Standing to one side, he offered his hand to assist Marta. But she seemed not to see it. Her answer was that of downright antagonism.

"However absurd. Yes, it is absurd to think that you can make me a party to any of your plans, for"—She broke off abruptly with staring eyes, as if she had seen an apparition.

RAGE IN EYES

Lanstron turned and through the door of the toolroom saw Feller entering the sitting-room. He was not the bent, deferential gardener. His features were hard-set, a fighting rage burning in his eyes, his sinews taut as if about to spring upon an adversary. When he recognized the intruders he turned limp, his head drooped, hiding his face with his hat brim, and he steadied himself by resting a hand on the table edge.

"Oh, it's you, Lanny—Colonel Lanstron" he exclaimed thickly. "I saw that some one had come in here and naturally I was alarmed, as nobody but myself ever enters. And Miss Galland!" He removed his hat deferentially and bowed, his stoop returned and the lines of his face drooped. "I was so stupid; it did not occur to me that you might be showing the tower to Colonel Lanstron."

"We are sorry to have given you a fright!" said Marta very gently.

"Eh? Eh" queried Feller, again deaf. "Fright! Oh, no, no fright. It might have been some boys from the town marauding."

He was about to withdraw, in keeping with his circumspect adherence to his part, which he played with a sincerity that half-convinced even himself at times that he was really deaf, when the fire flickered back suddenly to his eyes and he glanced from Lanstron to the stairway in desperate inquiry.

"Wait, Feller. Three of us share the secret now. These are Miss Galland's premises. I thought best that she should know everything." said Lanstron.

"Everything!" exclaimed Feller. "Everything—" the word caught in his throat. "You mean my story, too?" He was neither young nor old now. "She knows who I am?" he asked.

"His story!" explained Marta, with a puzzled look to Lanstron before she turned to Feller with a look of warm sympathy. "Why, there is no story! You came with excellent recommendations. You are our very efficient gardener. That is all we need to know. Isn't that the way you wish it, Mr. Feller?"

"Yes, just that!" he said softly, raising his eyes to her. "Thank you, Miss Galland!"

HOW SHE KNEW

He was going after another "Thank you!" and a bow; going with the slow step of stoop and age, when Lanstron, with a masculine roughness of impulse which may be sublime gentleness, swung him around and seized his hands in a firm caress.

"Forgive me, Gustave!" he begged. "Forgive the most brutal of all injuries—that which wounds a friend's sensibilities."

"Why, there is nothing I could ever have to forgive you, Lanny," he said, returning Landstron's pressure while for an instant his quickening muscles gave him a soldierly erectness. Then the habitual change in his tone of doubt and inquiry. "And you found out that I was dead when you had that fight on the terrace?" he asked, turning to Marta. "That is how you happened to get the whole story? Tell me, honestly."

"Yes."

"You saw so much more of me than the others, Miss Galland," he said with a chuckling laugh that was almost quick to observe. "I am sorry"—he paused with head down for an instant—"very sorry to have deceived you."

"But you are still a deaf gardener to me," said Marta, finding relief in pleasing him.

"Eh?" He put his hand to his ear as he resumed his stoop. "Yes, yes," he added, as a deaf man will when misunderstanding a word which he failed at first to catch comes to him in an echo. "Yes, the gardener has no ear." he declared in the gentle old gardener's voice, "when all the flowers die every year and he thinks only of next year's blossoms—of the future."

Now the air of the room seemed to be stifling him, that of the roofless world of the garden calling him. The hunt figure disappeared around a turn in the path and they listened without moving until the sound of his slow, dragging footfalls had died away.

"When he is serving those of his own social station I can see how it would be easier for him not to have one knave," said Marta. "Sensitive, proud and intense"—a shudder of horror appeared in her eyes. "As he came across the room his face was transformed. I imagine I can take that of a man giving no quarter in a bayonet charge!"

THE RIGHT VIEW

Feller had won the day for himself, where a friend's pleas might have failed. This was as it should be, Lanstron thought.

"The right view—the view that you were bound to take!" he said.

"And yet, I don't know your plans for him, Lanny. There is nothing to consider," she replied, with an abrupt change of tone. "But first let us leave Feller's affairs. We are intruders here."

A man playing deaf; a secret telephone installed on our premises without our consent—that is all I know so far," said Marta, as the two opposite Lanstron at one end of the circular seat in the arbor of Mercury.

"Of course with the 5,000,000 against their 3,000,000, the Grays will take the offensive," he said. "For us the defensive. La Tir is in an angle, it does not belong in the permanent natural line of our defenses. Nevertheless, there will be hard fighting here. The Browns will fall back step by step, and we mean, with relatively small cost to ourselves, to make the Grays pay a heavy price for each step—just as heavy as we can."

"You need not use euphonious terms," she said without lifting her lashes or any movement except a quick, nervous gesture of her free hand. "What you mean is that you will kill as many as possible of the Grays, isn't it? And if you could kill five for every man you lost, that would be splendid, wouldn't it?"

"I don't think of it as splendid. There is nothing splendid about war," he objected; "not to me, Marta."

"And after you have made them pay five to one or ten to one in human lives for the tongent, what then? Go on! I want to look at war face to face, free of the will-o'-the-wisp glamour that draws on soldiers."

"We fall back to our first line of defence, fighting all the time. The Grays occupy La Tir, which will be out of the reach of our guns. Your house will no longer be in danger, and we happen to know that Westerling means to make it his headquarters."

SPY AND SPY

"Our house Westerling's headquarters!" she repeated. With a start that brought her out of her half-conscious lenging, her lashes flickering, she recalled that Westerling had said at parting that he should see her if war came. This corroborated Landstron's information. One side wanted a spy in the camp; the other a general in the house. Was she expected to make a choice? He had ceased to be Lanny. He personified war. "I suppose you have spies under his very nose—in his very staff offices?" she asked.

"And probably he has in ours," said Lanstron, "though we do our best to prevent it."

"What a pretty example of trust among civilized nations!" she exclaimed. "You say that Westerling, who commands the killing on his side, will be in no danger. And, Lanny, are you a person of such distinction in the business of killing that you also will be out of danger?"

She did not see, as her eyes poured her hot indignation into him, that his maimed hand was twitching or how he bit his lips and flushed before he replied:

"Each one goes where he is sent, link by link, down from the chief of staff. Only in this way can you have that solidarity, that harmonious efficiency which means victory."

"An autocracy, a tyranny over the lives of all the adult males in countries that boast of the ballot and self-governing institutions!" she sputtered.

"But I hope," he went on, with the quickening pulse and eager smile that need to greet a call from Feller, "let things progress for the next few days, that I may take out a squadron of dirigibles. After all this spy business, that would be my taste."

"And if you caught a regiment in close formation with a shower of bombs, that would be splendid, heavenly, wouldn't it?" She bent nearer to him, her eyes flaming demand and satire.

"No. War, necessary, horrible, hellish?" he replied, seeming in his quarters in the tower; how he could judge the atmosphere of the staff, whether elated or depressed, pick up scraps of conversation, and, as a trained officer, know the value of what he heard and report it over the phone to Partow's headquarters."

"But what about the aeroplanes?" she asked. "I thought you were to depend on them for scouting."

"We shall use them, but they are the least tried of all the new resources," he said. "A Grays aeroplane may cut a Brown aeroplane down before it returns with the news we want. At most, when the advance may descend low enough for accurate observation he can see only what is actually being done. Feller would know Westerling's plans before they were even in the first steps of execution. This"—playing the thought happily—"this would be the ideal arrangement, while our planes and dirigibles were kept over our lines to strike down theirs. And, Marta, that is all," he concluded.

"If there is war the moment that Feller's ruse is discovered he will be shot as a spy!" she said.

"I warned him of that," said Lanstron. "He is a soldier, with a soldier's fatalism. He sees more danger in this than in commanding a battery in a crisis."

GRAYS MUST NOT WIN!

"Suppose that the Grays win? Suppose that La Tir is permanently theirs?"

"They shall not win! They must not!" Lanstron exclaimed, his tone as rigid as Westerling's toward her second prophecy.

"Yet if they should win and Westerling finds that I have been party to this treachery, as I shall be now that I am in the secret, think of the position of my mother and myself" she continued. "Has that occurred to you, a friend, in making our property, our garden, our neutrality, which is our only defense, a factor in one of your plans without our permission?"

Her eyes, blue-black in appeal and reproach, revealed the depths of a wound as they had on the terrace steps before luncheon, when he had been apprised of a feeling for him by seeing it dead under his blow.

The logic of the chief of intelligence withered. He understood how a friendship to her was, indeed, more sacred than patriotic passion. He realized the shame of what he had done now that he was free of professional influences.

"You are right, Marta!" he replied. "It was beastly of me—there is no excuse."

He looked around to see an orderly from the nearest military wireless station.

"I was told it was urgent, sir," said the orderly, in excuse for his intrusion, as he passed a telegram to Lanstron.

Immediately Lanstron felt the touch of the paper his features seemed to take on a mask that concealed his thought as he read:

"LET HIM STAY"

This meant that he would be expected at Partow's office at eight the next morning. He wrote his answer; the orderly saluted and departed at a rapid pace; and then, as a matter of habit of the same kind that makes some men wipe their pens when laying them down, he struck a match and set fire to one corner of the paper, which burned to his fingers' ends before he tossed the charred remains away. Marta imagined what he would be like with the havoc of war raging around him—all self-possession and mastery; but actually he was trying to reassure himself that he ought not to feel petulant over a holiday cut short.

"I shall have to go at once," he said. "Marta, if there were to be war very soon—within a week or two weeks—what would be your attitude about Feller's remaining?"

"To carry out his plan, you mean?" "Yes."

There was a perceptible pause on her part.

"Let him stay," she answered. "I shall have time to decide even after war begins."

"But instantly war begins you must go!" he declared urgently.

"You forget a precedent," she reminded him. "The Galland women have never deserted the Galland house."

I know the precedent. But this time the house will be in the thick of the fighting before," she said, with a gesture of impatience.

"Marta, you will promise not to remain?" he urged.

"Isn't that my affair?" she asked. "Aren't you willing to leave even that to me? After all you have been telling how you are to make a redoubt of our lawn, inviting the shells of the enemy into our drawing-room?"

A DECLARATION

What could he say? Only call up from the depths the two passions of his life in an outburst, with all the force of his nature in play.

"I love this soil, my country's soil, ours by right—and I love you! I would be true to both!"

"Love!" What a mockery to mention that now!" she cried chokingly. "It's monstrous!"

"I—I—" He was making an effort to keep his nerves under control.

The lifting elbow failed. "With a lurching abruptness he swung his right hand around and seized the arm of that trembling, injured hand that would not be still. She could not fail to notice the movement, and the sight was a magic that struck anger out of her.

"Lanny, I am hurting you!" she cried miserably.

"A little," he said, still finally dominant over his servants, and he was smiling as when, half stunned and in agony—and ashamed of the fact—he had risen from the debris of cloth and twisted braces. "It's all right," he concluded.

She threw back her arms, her head raised, with a certain abandon as if she would bare her heart.

"Lanny, there have been moments when I would have flled to fly to your arms. There have been moments when I have had the call that comes to every woman in answer to a desire. Yet I was not ready. When I really go it must be in a flame, in answer to your flame!"

"You mean—I—"

But if the flame were about to burst forth she smothered it in the spark.

"And all this has upset me," she went on irrocherently. "We've both been crazy without meaning to be, and we're in the shadow of a nightmare; and next time you come perhaps all the war talk will be over, and—oh, this is enough for today!"

"If it ever comes," she called, "I'll let you know. I'll fly to you in a chariot of fire bearing my flame—I am that bold, that brazen, that reckless! For I am not an old maid yet. They've moved the age limit up to thirty. But you can't drill love into me as you drill discipline into armies —no, no more than I can argue peace into armies!"

CHAPTER VII.

Making a War

HEDWORTH WESTERLING would have said twenty to one if he had been asked the odds against war when he was parting from Marta Galland in the hotel reception room. Before he reached home he would have changed them to ten to one. A score bulletin about the Balkpoo affair compelling attention as his car halted to let the traffic of a cross street pass, he bought a newspaper thrust in at the car window that contained the answer of the government of the Browns to a dispatch of the Grays about the dispute that had arisen in the distant African jungle. This he had already read two days previously, by courtesy of the Premier. It was moderate in tone, as became a power that had 3,000,000 soldiers against its opponent's 5,000,000, nevertheless, it firmly pointed out that the territory of the Browns had been overtly invaded, on the pretext of securing a German who had escaped across the line, by Gray colonial troops who had raised the tricolor flag in place of the Brown flag and remained defiantly in occupation of the outpost they had taken.

As yet, the Browns had not attempted to repel the aggressor by arms for fear of complications, but were relying on the Gray government to order a withdrawal of the Gray force and the repudiation of a commander who had been guilty of so grave an international affront. The surprising and illuminating thing to Westerling was the inspired statement to the press from the Gray foreign office, adroitly appealing to Gray chauvinism and justifying the "intrepidity" of the Gray commander in response to so-called "pin-pricking" exasperations.

"Important, sir," said Francois.

WITH THE PREMIER

Westerling knew by a glance that it was, for it was addressed and marked "Personal" in the premier's own handwriting. A conference telegram that evening was requested in a manner that left no doubt of its importance.

Curiosity mals him a little ahead of time, but he found the premier awaiting him in his study, free from interruption or eavesdropping.

In the shadow of the table lamp the old premier looked his years. From youth he had been in politics, ever a bold figure and a daring player, but now beginning to feel the pressure of younger men's elbows. Fonder even of power, which had become a habit, than in his twenties, he saw it slipping from his grasp at an age when the downfall of his government meant that he should never hold the reins again. He had been called an ambitious demagogue and a makeshift opportunist by his enemies, but the crowd liked him for his ready strategy, his genius for appealing phrases, and for the gambler's virtue which had never had made him a good loser.

"You saw our communique tonight that went with the publication of the Browns' dispatch?" he remarked.

"Yes, and I am glad that I had been careful to send a spirited commander to that region," Westerling replied.

"So you guess my intention, I see." The premier smiled. He picked up a long thin ivory paper-knife and softly patted the palms of his hand with it. "Certainly!" Westerling replied in his ready, confident manner.

"We hear a great deal about the prowess and power of modern arms as favoring the defensive," said the premier. "It would somewhere that it will enable the Browns to hold us back, despite our advantage of numbers. Also, that they can completely man every part of their frontier and that their ability to move their reserves rapidly, thanks to modern facilities, makes a powerful flanking attack in surprise out of the question."

PLANS AGGRESSIVE

"Some half-truths in that," answered Westerling. "One axiom, that must hold good through all time is that the aggressive which keeps at it always wins. We take the aggressive. In the space where Napoleon deployed a division, we deploy a battalion today. The precision and power of modern arms require this. With such immense forces and present-day tactics, the line of battle will practically cover the length of the frontier. Along their range the Browns have a series of fortresses commanding natural openings for our attack. These are almost impregnable. But there are pregnable points between them. Here, our method will be the same that the Japanese followed and that they learned from European armies. We shall concentrate in masses and throw in wave after wave of attack until we have gained the positions we desire. Once we have a tenable foothold on the crest of the range the Brown army must fall back and the rest will be a matter of skilful pursuit."

The premier, as he listened, rolled the paper knife over and over, regarding its polished sides, which were like Westerling's manner of facile statement of a program certain of fulfilment.

"Less than a week after the railroads are put entirely at our service with three preceding days of scattered movements," answered Westerling. "Deliberate mobilizations are all right for a diplomatic threat that creates a furore in the newspapers and depression in the stock market, but which is not to be carried out. When you mean war, all mixed and the war fever at white heat."

"You would have made a good politician, Westerling," the premier remarked, with a twitching uplift of the brows and a knowing gleam in his shrewd old eyes.

"Thank you," replied Westerling, "a man who is able to lead in anything must be something of a politician."

"Very true, indeed. You see I had that partly in mind in making you vice-chief of staff," responded the premier.

"Then it all goes back to the public—to that enormous body of humanity out there!" He swung the paper knife around with outstretched arm toward the walls of the room. "To public opinion—as does everything else in this age—to modern factors, yours and mine! For no man can stand against them when they say no or yes."

"SURE TO WIN"

"And you are sure—sure we can win?" the premier asked with a long, tense look at Westerling, who was steady under the scrutiny.

"Absolutely!" he answered. "Five millions against three! It's mathematics, or our courage and skill are not equal to theirs. Absolutely! We have the power, why not use it? We do not live in a dream age."

From a sudden, unwitting exertion of his strength the knife which had been the recipient of his emotions snapped in two. Rather carefully he laid the pieces on the table before he rose and turned to Westerling, his decision made.

"If the people respond with the war fever, then we have war," he said. "I take you at your word that you will win!"
